

Legal Studies
Research Paper Series

Research Paper No. 05 - 10

The Supreme Court's Indian Problem

Matthew L.M. Fletcher

This paper can be downloaded without charge from the Social Science Research Network Electronic Paper Collection at:

<http://ssrn.com/abstract=xxxxxx>

THE SUPREME COURT'S INDIAN PROBLEM

Matthew L.M. Fletcher
Michigan State University College of Law

Abstract

This year, while accepting the “Rule of Law” award from the American Bar Association, Justice Breyer proclaimed that our constitutional system “floats on a sea of public acceptance.” At that time, Breyer’s statements were meant to highlight his expectation that the Court will decide its cases following the “rule of law.”

However, Breyer’s statement, while demonstrative of his faith in the rule of law, does not always ring true. In fact, as I argue, the Supreme Court often decides its cases by ignoring, rather than following, the rule of law. This problem is particularly acute in the body of federal Indian law—which has cast a disastrous shadow on tribal interests. Tribes have lost about three-quarters of their cases before the Supreme Court since 1988. Yet, curiously, prior to 1988, tribal interests won slightly more than half of their cases. What changed?

In this Article, I attempt to answer this question. Justice Scalia’s pithy comment last Term that some matters are more “likely to arouse the judicial libido” offers a clue. I argue that the Court’s reasons for granting certiorari and for deciding against tribal interests in these cases are not consistent with the rule of law. In fact, I will show that the Court identifies important, unrelated constitutional concerns that arise often in Indian law cases – issues with which they and their clerks are familiar – and then decides those matters. Only afterward, and mostly as an afterthought, does the Court then turn to the federal Indian law questions. The Court’s federal Indian law analysis takes a secondary and often inferior role.

The result of this obfuscation is an unrelenting assault on tribal interests before the Court—and the rule of law more generally. In this Article, I offer the first in-depth empirical assessment of the Supreme Court’s recent Indian law decisions and argue in favor of a sweeping change in the means of analyzing Indian law. Instead of focusing on the Indian law questions, this Article shows how major Indian law cases were decided on other grounds to significant tribal disadvantage. Analyzing federal Indian law in this manner makes transparent the Court’s frightening disrespect for the rule of law.

THE SUPREME COURT’S INDIAN PROBLEM

Matthew L.M. Fletcher*

“[These] matters [are] more likely to arouse the judicial libido—voting rights, antidiscrimination laws, or environmental protection, to name a few....”
– Justice Scalia¹

“[T]he Supreme Court sort of makes it up as they go along.”
– Judge Roger L. Wollman, Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, on Indian law²

“This constitutional system floats on a sea of public acceptance.”
– Justice Breyer³

What “arouse[s] the judicial libido”?⁴ Federalism? Race? The environment? The exclusionary rule? How about federal Indian law? How can that be? Who understands Indian law? Who wants to? Why would the Supreme Court ever want to hear Indian law cases in a discretionary docket? But they do – an average of two cases per year since 1953⁵ and on occasion as many as five cases in a single Term,⁶ a proportion far higher than some other kinds of cases that attract Justice Scalia’s “judicial libido.”

* Associate Professor, Michigan State University College of Law. J.D., University of Michigan Law School. Enrolled Member, Grand Traverse Band of Ottawa and Chippewa Indians. Chi-miigwetch to Todd Aagaard, Larry Catá Backer, Jeannine Bell, Kirsten Carlson, Kristen Carpenter, Richard Delgado, Margareth Etienne, Zeke Fletcher, Kate Fort, Phil Frickey, Luis Fuentes-Rohwer, Ian Gershengorn, Sam Hirsch, Brian Kalt, Riyaz Kanji, Sonia Katyal, John Petoskey, Angela Riley, Wenona Singel, Joe Singer, Alex Skibine, and Kevin Washburn.

¹ Zuni Public School Dist. No. 89 v. Dept. of Education, 127 S. Ct. 1534, 1556 (2007) (Scalia, J., dissenting).

² Oral Argument of Appellant, Prescott v. Little Six, Inc., 387 F.3d 753 (8th Cir. 2004) (quoting Judge Wollman at 14:51 of oral argument), cert. denied, 544 U.S. 1032 (2005).

³ Bob Egelko, Breyer: Public support key to judiciary future: Supreme Court justice uses historic rulings as examples, S.F. CHRON., Aug. 12, 2007, at __ (quoting Justice Breyer).

⁴ Zuni Public School Dist. No. 89, 127 S. Ct. at 1556 (Scalia, J., dissenting).

⁵ See VANESSA A. BAIRD, ANSWERING THE CALL OF THE COURT: HOW JUSTICES AND LITIGANTS SET THE SUPREME COURT AGENDA 104 (2007).

⁶ The 1997 Term, for example, featured five cases involving tribal interests. See South Dakota v. Yankton Sioux Tribe, 522 U.S. 329 (1998); Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie, 522 U.S. 520 (1998); Montana v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 523 U.S. 696 (1998); Kiowa Tribe of Oklahoma v. Manufacturing Technologies, Inc., 523 U.S. 751 (1998); Cass County, Minn. v. Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians, 524 U.S. 103 (1998). And the 2000 Term featured five cases involving tribal interests as well. See Department of Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Ass’n, 532 U.S. 1 (2001); C & L Enterprises v. Citizen Band Potawatomi

Judge Wollman's humorous and off-the-cuff remark during oral argument in an Indian law case a few years back epitomizes an area of law that is often confusing, unpredictable, and prone to obfuscation. But it is here in federal Indian law where the rule of law championed by members of the Supreme Court is under constant assault – and stands as a harbinger of what may be coming in other areas that attract the judicial or the academy's or mass media's attention. Perhaps one way to explain what is going on is to imagine the Indian cases in a new way.

This Article asserts a new theory about why and how the Supreme Court accepts and decides its Indian law docket: the Court identifies an important constitutional concern embedded in a run-of-the-mill Indian law cert. petition, grants cert., and then applies its decision making discretion to decide the “important” constitutional concern. Once that portion of the Indian law case is decided, the Court decides any remaining federal Indian law questions in order to reach a result consistent with its decision on the important constitutional concern. From the view of a national decision-maker such as a Supreme Court Justice, there is much more to a simple Indian law case than a dispute between Indians, Indian tribes, and the non-Indian individuals, governments, and entities that oppose them. There are questions of equal protection and due process, federalism, jurisdiction, Congressional and Executive branch power, and more. Indian law disputes often are mere vessels for the Court to tackle larger questions; often these questions have little to do with federal Indian law. And, since Indian law is not as grounded in the Constitution as the other questions, it is more malleable, prone to inconsistencies and unpredictability.

Perhaps as a result of this modern view of the law, federal Indian law as practiced before the Supreme Court is in serious normative decline – and most likely began to degenerate around the time of the ascension of Chief Justice Rehnquist in 1986⁷ and the concomitant trend toward reducing the Supreme Court's docket.⁸ By “serious normative decline,” I mean a general reduction in Indian law cases decided on the basis of established precedent, an increase in cases decided without a guiding legal theory, and an increase in cases that appear to be decided on the basis of the gut reaction of the Justices. And, as a corollary, much of the federal Indian law understood as deriving from cases about Indians – cases that explored and defined the rights and responsibilities of tribes and individual Indians, cases that could not have existed but for some unique legal characteristic that only the presence of a tribal interest brought out – is not really about Indians, tribes, or Indian law. What scholars and practitioners should do is look at federal Indian law through a lens of assuming that the cases have nothing to do with Indians or Indian tribes. Federal Indian law as the modern Supreme Court reads and understands it begins to make more sense that way.

Indian Tribe of Okla., 532 U.S. 411 (2001); Atkinson Trading Co., Inc. v. Shirley, 532 U.S. 645 (2001); Idaho v. United States, 533 U.S. 262 (2001); Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353 (2001).

⁷ See generally Ralph W. Johnson & Berrie Martinis, Chief Justice Rehnquist and the Indian Cases, 16 PUB. LAND L. REV. 1 (1991).

⁸ See Frank B. Cross & Stefanie Lindquist, The Decisional Significance of the Chief Justice, 154 U. PA. L. REV. 1665, 1672 (2006) (the “incredibly shrinking docket”); Kenneth W. Starr, The Supreme Court and Its Shrinking Docket: The Ghost of William Howard Taft, 90 MINN. L. REV. 1363, 1368-76 (2006). At the same time, the docket appears to be shrinking even further. See Linda Greenhouse, Case of the Dwindling Docket Mystifies the Supreme Court, N.Y. TIMES, Dec. 7, 2006, at A1. In the October 2006 Term, the Court decided only 68

This Article attempts a fresh look at the Court’s Indian cases from more of a “positive rather than a normative analysis....”⁹ This Article’s goal is to give “systematic attention to ... implications for Supreme Court decisionmaking” in the context of federal Indian law.¹⁰ The argument begins with a description of two classic Indian law cases in Part I. These cases represent a vital and dynamic part of Indian law – forming a part of the core of the Indian law canon – but they can be read as something other than an Indian law case. In fact, these cases, while decided in reliance on Indian law principles, includes separate, independent reasons – related to constitutional or pragmatic policymaking – for the outcome.

Part II introduces the current state of federal Indian law. The Court makes decisions in the Indian law field not through reliance upon a rule of law or even through much reliance on precedent, but instead with reliance upon its view of the way things “ought to be,” as Justice Scalia once wrote in an internal memorandum.¹¹ The Court’s decisions now reflect a “ruthless pragmatism” as a result of this view of Indian law.¹²

Part III offers a fresh view of several of the Court’s most important modern era Indian cases by placing the Court’s Indian caseload in the context of its larger trends. The most obvious trend is the severe decline in the Court’s cases, the lowest number in over a half-century. See Linda Greenhouse, In Steps Big and Small, Supreme Court Moved Right, N.Y. TIMES, July 1, 2007, at A1.

⁹ Richard A. Posner, Foreword: A Political Court, 119 HARV. L. REV. 31, 32 (2005).

¹⁰ Neal Kumar Katyal, Comment – Hamdan v. Rumsfeld: The Legal Academy Goes to Practice, 120 HARV. L. REV. 66, 68 (2006). Professor Katyal’s paper on the strategies and preparations for litigating Hamdan v. Rumsfeld before the Supreme Court should be mandatory reading for tribal attorneys without much experience in Supreme Court litigation.

¹¹ David H. Getches, Conquering the Cultural Frontier: The New Subjectivism of the Supreme Court in Indian Law, 84 CAL. L. REV. 1573, 1575 (1996).

¹² Philip P. Frickey, (Native) American Exceptionalism in Federal Public Law, 119 HARV. L. REV. 431, 460 (2005); see also id. at 436 (“ruthless pragmatism”).

docket. The decline in the caseload should mean that most of the Court's Indian cases are decided in order to resolve a split in authority in the lower and state courts. But those splits in authority account for few cases. Other Indian law cases appear to reach the Court because they raise or involve questions of important constitutional concern for the Court. It is a possibility that the declining docket means that the Court will hear fewer and fewer (if any) cases on their Indian law-related merits, but instead choose Indian law cases because they present an opportunity to opine on an important constitutional concern outside of Indian law.

Part III also offers a new look at several important Indian law cases from the last few decades, describing how these particular cases make more sense if they are viewed not from a federal Indian law lens, but from the point of the view of the Court and its big picture take on constitutional law. Cases often considered core Indian law cases like Morton v. Mancari,¹³ Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association,¹⁴ and Minnesota v. Mille Lacs Band of Chippewa Indians,¹⁵ include a powerful undercurrent of non-Indian law, an undercurrent that perhaps included issues more salient to the Court's Members than tribal sovereignty or Indian rights.

Part IV recommends that observers of federal Indian law begin to highlight the "important" constitutional questions that may arise in future Indian law cases. This Article does not recommend abandoning the quest for normative analyses and conclusions about Indian law, but instead recommends incorporating a positive aspect to the analysis. Part IV concludes by applying the template to several cases rising through the federal court system that the Court may agree to hear in the coming years. If nothing else, identification of the important constitutional concerns involved in these cases will aid tribal advocates in predicting the relative chances of success before the Court.

Where observers go wrong, this Article asserts, is by ignoring the Supreme Court's broader agenda, an agenda driven by its receding docket. This Article asserts that the Supreme Court grants petitions for writ of certiorari not because the Court wants to decide tribal interests or even to put Indians in their place. The Court does not care what happens in Indian Country. To assume the Court does care is unwarranted; there is no evidence whatsoever to suggest that the Court (as a whole) is invested in the concerns and issues in Indian Country, which is as far from the minds of the elite legal establishment as any issue can be.

¹³ 417 U.S. 535 (1974).

¹⁴ 485 U.S. 439 (1988).

¹⁵ 526 U.S. 172 (1999).

What does interest the Court are constitutional questions of Congressional and Executive power; broader federalism issues unrelated to the place of Indian tribes in the federalism scheme; the legitimacy, sanctity, and authority of federal courts; and larger issues related to race and social issues. There is significant evidence to support these assertions.¹⁶ These areas are now the significant areas of constitutional concern that attracts the Court's attention. The fact that these constitutional concerns arise in Indian Country – both in modern times and throughout the Court's history – often is accidental. But these issues do appear to arise in Indian Country on a consistent basis. That federal Indian law principles do not answer these broader questions is a significant reason why the Court deviates from Indian law principles and even appears to denigrate them. When tribal advocates recognize these broader constitutional concerns in advance of a certiorari petition, then the advocacy before the Court on behalf of tribal interests will improve, as will the win rate for tribal advocates.

To be fair to tribal advocates, in at least one recent case,¹⁷ counsel for tribal interests did make an attempt to bring forth to the Court pragmatic reasons outside the realm of federal Indian law justifying a decision in favor of tribal interests. This attempt failed and for explainable reasons, but future litigants should use the strategy as a template in future cases.

I. A New Theory of Supreme Court Indian Law Decisionmaking

Consider the following fact patterns:

- A court of the State of Georgia convicts an Indian man of murder and sentences him to death. The crime took place outside the jurisdiction of the state – on an Indian reservation. The defendant appeals to federal courts, seeking a writ of habeas corpus. The United States Supreme Court grants the petition and issues an order staying the execution. The State of Georgia then executes the man two days later.¹⁸ The Georgia legislature then passes a resolution asserting that the United States Supreme Court does not possess authority to review the decisions of Georgia state courts. The Court then hears a second criminal case raising concomitant issues relating to the Georgia

¹⁶ See, e.g., Lee Epstein, Interest Group Litigation During the Rehnquist Court Era, 9 J. L. & POL. 639, 663-65 (1993); Thomas W. Merrill, The Making of the Second Rehnquist Court: A Preliminary Analysis, 47 ST. LOUIS U. L. J. 569, 585-86 (2003).

¹⁷ Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005).

¹⁸ See Georgia v. Tassels, 1 Dud. 229 (Ga. 1930).

legislature's repeated attempts to nullify treaties and other federal law.¹⁹

- An Indian woman sues an Indian tribe in federal court seeking a declaration that a tribal membership ordinance is a violation of the equal protection clause of the Indian Civil Rights Act.²⁰ The Supreme Court grants certiorari.²¹

The previous fact patterns are simplified versions of two foundational federal Indian law cases. With the exception of the first part of the first fact pattern (a case made moot by the state), the parties to the cases argued and briefed the cases as though they were Indian law cases. Scholars who have critiqued and analyzed the cases have treated them as Indian law cases and these cases appear in prominent fashion in the two major casebooks on federal Indian law.²² These two cases are classic cases that form a part of the backbone of federal Indian law.

But it could be argued that neither of these cases are federal Indian law cases.

These cases highlight the possibility that perhaps it is a mistake to think of many of the cases that form the canon of modern Indian law as Indian law cases. In the last twenty years under the Rehnquist Court, for example, it is harder and harder to find Indian law Supreme Court decisions relying upon foundational principles of Indian law, especially those rooted in the Constitution. Such a conclusion should not be so surprising. Prominent constitutional law scholars suggest that there is no such thing as principled constitutional interpretation. For example, Professor Jed Rubenfeld wrote:

In constitutional law ... there are no such overarching interpretive precepts or protocols. There are no official interpretive rules at all. In any given case raising an undecided constitutional question, nothing in any current constitutional law stops a judge from relying on original intent, if the judge wishes. But nothing stops a judge from ignoring original intent, if a judge wishes. Or suppose a plaintiff comes to court asserting an unwritten constitutional right. Under current case law, judges are fully authorized to dismiss the right because the Constitution says nothing about it. Another admissible option, ¹⁹ See Worcester v. Georgia, 31 U.S. 515 (1832).

²⁰ 25 U.S.C. § 1302(8).

²¹ Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49 (1978).

²² See ROBERT N. CLINTON, CAROLE E. GOLDBERG, AND REBECCA TSOSIE, AMERICAN INDIAN LAW: NATIVE NATIONS AND THE FEDERAL SYSTEM 71-81 (5th ed. 2007) (Worcester); id. at 432-39 (Martinez); DAVID H. GETCHES, CHARLES F. WILKINSON, AND ROBERT A. WILLIAMS, JR., CASES AND MATERIALS ON FEDERAL INDIAN LAW 112-21 (5th ed. 2005) (Worcester); id. at 391-97 (Martinez).

however, is to uphold the right on nontextual grounds. Evolving American values? Judges can consult them or have nothing to do with them.²³

Indian law scholars have been decrying the lack of principled decisionmaking about federal Indian law for decades.²⁴ Nothing stops the Court – no constitutional provision, common law principle, or anything else – from working radical transformations of federal Indian law at any moment.²⁵ The only constitutional provision mentioning Indian tribes is the Indian Commerce Clause.²⁶ As with the rest of constitutional interpretation, there are no rules, except one – the Court looks for the familiar, a constitutional concern that attracts its attention.²⁷

The first fact pattern, based on *Georgia v. Tassels*²⁸ and Worcester v. Georgia,²⁹ involved questions of federalism and the supremacy of federal law

²³ JED RUBENFELD, REVOLUTION BY JUDICIARY 5 (2006).

²⁴ E.g., Russel Lawrence Barsh & James Youngblood Henderson, The Betrayal: Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe and the Hunting of the Snark, 63 MINN. L. REV. 609 (1979); John Petoskey, Indians and the First Amendment, in AMERICAN INDIAN POLICY IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY 221 (Vine Deloria, Jr., ed. 1985).

²⁵ Consider City of Sherrill, N.Y. v. Oneida Indian Nation of N.Y., 544 U.S. 197 (2005), which redrew the map relating to Indian land claims in a single instant. See Cayuga Indian Nation of N.Y. v. Pataki, 413 F.3d 266 (2nd Cir. 2005) (dismissing Indian land claims after 20 years of litigation by following the reasoning of Sherrill); Kathryn E. Fort, The (In)Equities of Federal Indian Law, 54 FED. LAW., March/April 2007, at 32; Wenona T. Singel & Matthew L.M. Fletcher, Power, Authority, and Tribal Property, 41 TULSA L. REV. 21 (2005); Joseph William Singer, Nine-Tenths of the Law: Title, Possession & Sacred Obligations, 38 CONN. L. REV. 605 (2006).

²⁶ CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. For more discussion of the background and possible limits of federal power under the Indian Commerce Clause, please see United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 224-26 (2004) (Thomas, J., concurring); AKHIL REED AMAR, AMERICA'S CONSTITUTION: A BIOGRAPHY 107-08 (2005); Milner S. Ball, Constitution, Court, Indian Tribes, 1987 AM. B. FOUNDATION RESEARCH J. 1; Clinton, There is No Supremacy Clause, supra note __; Saikrishna Prakash, Against Tribal Fungibility, 89 CORNELL L. REV. 1069 (2004).

²⁷ Cf. Lawrence Lessig, How I Lost the Big One, LEGAL AFF., March/April 2004, at 57, 59.

²⁸ 1 Dud. 229 (Ga. 1830). For background material, please see TIM ALAN GARRISON, THE LEGAL IDEOLOGY OF REMOVAL: THE SOUTHERN JUDICIARY AND THE SOVEREIGNTY OF NATIVE AMERICAN NATIONS 111-15 (2002); 1 CHARLES WARREN, THE SUPREME COURT IN UNITED STATES HISTORY 733-734 (rev. ed. 1926).

²⁹ 31 U.S. 515 (1832). For wide-ranging scholarly commentary on this very important case, please see RUSSEL LAWRENCE BARSH & JAMES YOUNGBLOOD HENDERSON, THE ROAD: INDIAN TRIBES AND POLITICAL LIBERTY 58-61 (1980); PHILIP BOBBITT, CONSTITUTIONAL FATE: THEORY OF THE CONSTITUTION 118-19 (1982); DAVID P. CURRIE, THE CONSTITUTION IN THE SUPREME COURT: THE FIRST HUNDRED YEARS, 1789-1888, at 181-83 (1985); PETRA T. SHATTUCK & JILL NORGREN, PARTIAL JUSTICE: FEDERAL INDIAN LAW IN A LIBERAL CONSTITUTIONAL SYSTEM 46-50 (1991) (Berg Publishers 1993); 1 WARREN, supra note __, at 754-61; G. EDWARD WHITE, THE MARSHALL COURT AND CULTURAL CHANGE, 1815-1835, at over conflicting state laws.³⁰ In that case, the State of Georgia issued a resolution proclaiming that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction or authority to review the decisions of state courts.³¹ The case arose in the larger national debate now known as the Nullification Crisis, where several Southern states argued that they had the authority to nullify federal statutes.³² Chief Justice Marshall believed these issues would arise in the 1832 Term in the form of a case involving the Second Bank of the United States, a critical focal point of the states' rights debate, or the various attempts by states to declare the unconstitutionality of (or nullify) federal law.³³ Instead, these issues appeared 731-37 (1988); DAVID E. WILKINS, & K. TSIANINA LOMAWAIMA, UNEVEN GROUND: AMERICAN INDIAN SOVEREIGNTY AND FEDERAL LAW 58-61 (2001); ROBERT A. WILLIAMS, JR., LINKING ARMS TOGETHER: AMERICAN INDIAN TREATY VISIONS OF LAW AND PEACE, 1600-1800, at 132-33 (1999); Joseph C. Burke, The Cherokee Cases: A Study in Law, Politics, and Morality, 21 STAN. L. REV. 500, 521-25 (1969); William Walters, Review Essay: Preemption, Tribal Sovereignty, and Worcester v. Georgia, 62 OR. L. REV. 127, 128-36, 139-41 (1983) (reviewing COHEN'S HANDBOOK OF FEDERAL INDIAN LAW (Rennard Strickland et al. eds. 1982) (hereinafter COHEN'S HANDBOOK 1982 ED.)).

³⁰ See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 559 ("The constitution, by declaring treaties already made, as well as those to be made, to be the supreme law of the land, has adopted and sanctioned the previous treaties with the Indian nations, and consequently admits their rank among those powers who are capable of making treaties."); id. at 561 ("[Georgia's laws] interfere forcibly with the relations established between the United States and the Cherokee nation, the regulation of which, according to the settled principles of our constitution, are committed exclusively to the government of the union."); CURRIE, supra note __, at 181-83; Burke, supra note __, at 512-13; Gerald N. Magliocca, The Cherokee Removal and the Fourteenth Amendment, 53 DUKE L. J. 875, 905-06 (2003).

³¹ See 1 WARREN, supra note __, at 733-34.

³² For commentary and background on the Nullification Crisis, please see ROBERT G. MCCLOSKEY, THE AMERICAN SUPREME COURT 42 (Sanford Levinson, ed., 2nd ed. 1994); R. KENT NEWMYER, THE SUPREME COURT UNDER MARSHALL AND TANEY 88 (1968); 1 WARREN, supra note __, at 770; David P. Currie, The Constitution in Congress: The Public Lands, 1829-1861, 70 U. CHI. L. REV. 783, 785 (2003); Michael J. Klarman, How Great Were the "Great" Marshall Court Decisions?, 87 VA. L. REV. 1111, 1136 (2001); Edwin A. Miles, After John Marshall's Decision: Worcester v. Georgia and the Nullification Crisis, 39 J. SOUTHERN HIST. 519 (1973); H. Jefferson Powell, Joseph Story's Commentaries on the Constitution: A Belated Review, 94 YALE L. J. 1285, 1292 (1985); H. Jefferson Powell, The Original Understanding of Original Intent, 98 HARV. L. REV. 885, 945 (1985); Jill Norgren, Protection of What Rights They Have: Original Principles of Federal Indian Law, 64 N.D. L. REV. 73, 110 (1988); R. Kent Newmyer, John Marshall, McCulloch v. Maryland, and the Southern States' Rights Tradition, 33 JOHN MARSHALL L. REV. 875, 876 (2000).

³³ See DAVID LOTH, CHIEF JUSTICE: JOHN MARSHALL AND THE GROWTH OF THE REPUBLIC 357 (1949) ("To Marshall, the tariff issue seemed more dangerous to his principles. For the South . . . was not professing itself willing to obey any protective tariff law."); id. at 356 (quoting letter to his son; "This session of Congress is indeed particularly interesting. The discussion on the tariff and on the Bank, especially, will, I believe call forth an unusual display of talents."); see also Richard P. Longaker, Andrew Jackson and the Judiciary, 71 in a case arising out of Indian Country. All the necessary elements of the other cases were present for the Court to announce that federal law was supreme over conflicting state law, the underlying important constitutional concern.

The second fact pattern, probably the most famous, controversial, and important opinion favoring tribal interests issued in the last 100 years – *Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez*³⁴ – could be construed as a mere statutory interpretation case about whether the Indian Civil Rights Act may be read to imply a cause of action³⁵ and to waive the sovereign immunity of a sovereign.³⁶ It is tempting to focus on the tribal sovereignty aspects of the case – and they are significant – but consider the underlying questions that could have been more salient to the Court: whether sovereign immunity is waived where a civil rights statute does not have a specific cause of action to enforce those rights and, perhaps, whether the Court’s nascent sex discrimination jurisprudence ought to be extended or reconsidered. Consider that if the Court construed the Act as implying a cause of action and waiving tribal sovereign immunity, the reasoning of such a precedent could be used against both federal and state sovereigns.

And these cases are not exceptions. It is a distinct possibility that there are fewer federal Indian law cases decided on the basis of federal Indian law principles over the course of the history of federal Indian law than one would expect. Of course, while those cases do appear to rely upon federal Indian law principles, what is becoming clearer to Indian law scholars and tribal advocates with each passing Term is that Court no longer applies a principled federal Indian law. In the last years of the Rehnquist Court, the tendency began to appear as an acute trend.

Practitioners and observers of Indian law should begin to recognize that the Supreme Court’s priorities in granting certiorari and deciding Indian law cases might not be related to Indians at all. It appears their priorities are, in order, important constitutional concerns and pragmatic effects of the POL. SCI. Q. 341, 348 (1956) (“While the President saw the Indian problem as a temporary one, the nullification issue presented a basic national crisis.”).

³⁴ 436 U.S. 49 (1978). For often intense commentary about the decision, see for example CATHARINE MACKINNON, FEMINISM UNMODIFIED: DISCOURSES ON LIFE AND LAW 63-69 (1987); Judith Resnik, Dependent Sovereigns: Indian Tribes, States, and the Federal Courts, 56 U. CHI. L. REV. 671 (1989); Angela P. Harris, Race and Essentialism in Feminist Legal Theory, 42 STAN. L. REV. 581 (1990); Gloria Valencia-Weber, Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez: Twenty Five Years of Disparate Cultural Visions, 14 KAN. J. L. & PUB. POL’Y 49 (2004-2005). For the point of view of a Santa Clara Pueblo woman, please see Rina Swentzell, Testimony of a Santa Clara Pueblo Woman, 14 KAN. J. L. & PUB. POL’Y 97 (2004-2005).

³⁵ See Martinez, 436 U.S. at 60-61 (citing Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66 (1975)).

³⁶ See id. at 58-59.

outcome. As the above historical cases highlight and as other recent cases discussed in Part III below demonstrate, federal Indian law as a consistent and logical legal doctrine is not a priority for the Rehnquist/Roberts Courts.

II. The Deplorable State of Federal Indian Law

The story begins with the wretched state of federal Indian law. Dean David Getches reported in 2001 that tribal interests have lost over 70 percent of cases before the Court for the fifteen Terms preceding his article and over 80 percent of cases in the ten Terms preceding his article.³⁷ One case upon which Dean Getches focused – *Strate v. A-1 Contractors*³⁸ – turned much of federal Indian law on its head.³⁹ And that was before the 2000 Term in which tribal interests won one and lost three cases, two of which were nothing short of devastating to tribal interests. These two cases, *Nevada v. Hicks*⁴⁰ and Atkinson Trading v. Shirley,⁴¹ shocked observers of federal Indian law in both the results and the “ruthless[ness]” of their reasoning. If there was any doubt about the Court’s sympathies in relation to tribal interests, the 2001 Term resolved those doubts with great clarity – tribal interests would find no quarter in the Supreme Court.⁴² Others, such as Professor Alex Skibine, note that the Court has decided 48 cases since 1988 following California v. Cabazon Band of Mission Indians,⁴³ with 33 of the cases going against the tribal interests and four being neutral.⁴⁴

³⁷ Getches, Beyond Indian Law, supra note ___, at 280.

³⁸ 520 U.S. 438 (1997).

³⁹ For a description of the impact of Strate in Indian Country, see, for example, Sarah Krakoff, Undoing Indian Law One Case at a Time: Judicial Minimalism and Tribal Sovereignty, 50 AM. U. L. REV. 1177, 1216-22 (2001); Skibine, The Court’s Use of the Implicit Divestiture Doctrine, supra note __; Wambdi Awanwicake Wastewin, Strate v. A-1 Contractors: Intrusion into the Sovereign Domain of Indian Nations, 74 N.D. L. REV. 711 (1998).

⁴⁰ 533 U.S. 353 (2001).

⁴¹ 532 U.S. 645 (2001).

⁴² See Joseph William Singer, Symposium Foreword: Indian Nations and the Law, 41 TULSA L. REV. 1, 3 (2005) (“In an era when many people support a ‘restrained’ judiciary willing to defer to Congress on the basis of ‘strict construction’ of both statutes and constitutional text, it is frustrating to find a Supreme Court that supposedly adheres to that philosophy, yet is so willing to ignore precedent and the text of the United States Constitution, federal treaties, and statutes in the interest of providing equitable treatment to non-Indian interests, while showing a fundamental misunderstanding of both the history of the United States’ relations with Indian nations and the basic principles of federal Indian law.”).

⁴³ 480 U.S. 202 (1987).

⁴⁴ See Alex Tallchief Skibine, Teaching Indian Law in an Anti-Tribal Era, 82 N.D. L. REV. 777, 781 (2006).

The scholarship in the field of federal Indian law focuses on three foundational principles: (1) Indian affairs are the exclusive province of the federal government;⁴⁵ (2) state authority does not extend into Indian Country;⁴⁶ and (3) Indian tribes retain significant inherent sovereign authority unless extinguished by Congress.⁴⁷ These foundational principles no longer (if they ever did) drive the Court's federal Indian law. The large majority of Indian law scholars have concluded that the recent federal Indian law cases – in which tribal interests win perhaps one-quarter of the time, less than convicted criminals⁴⁸ – are an abomination, a derogation of tribal sovereignty and Indian interests, and the worst form of judicial activism and assertions of judicial supremacy.⁴⁹ Most observers of federal Indian law cases reach the conclusion that – in the words of an Eighth Circuit judge who was reversed by the Court in a major Indian law case⁵⁰ – the Supreme Court makes up Indian law as it goes.⁵¹ Legal commentators struggle to reach a conclusion as to what drives the Supreme Court's recent Indian law jurisprudence, with some commentators asserting that the Rehnquist Court's "federalism revolution" in favor of states' rights has seeped into federal Indian law.⁵² Others assert that ⁴⁵ COHEN'S HANDBOOK 2005 ED., supra note __, at 2 ("[T]he federal government has broad powers and responsibilities in Indian affairs.") (emphasis omitted).

⁴⁶ Id. ("[S]tate authority in Indian affairs is limited.") (emphasis omitted).

⁴⁷ Id. ("[A]n Indian nation possesses in the first instance all of the powers of a sovereign state.") (emphasis omitted).

⁴⁸ See David H. Getches, Beyond Indian Law: The Rehnquist Court's Pursuit of States' Rights, Colorblind Justice and Mainstream Values, 86 MINN. L. REV. 267, 280-81 (2001) ("Tribal interests have lost about 77% of all the Indian cases decided by the Rehnquist Court in its fifteen terms, and 82% of the cases decided by the Supreme Court in the last ten terms. This dismal track record stands in contrast to the record tribal interests chalked up in the Burger years, when they won 58% of their Supreme Court cases. It would be difficult to find a field of law or a type of litigant that fares worse than Indians do in the Rehnquist Court. Convicted criminals achieved reversals in 36% of all cases that reached the Supreme Court in the same period, compared to the tribes' 23% success rate.") (footnotes omitted).

⁴⁹ For representative views from leading scholars, please see ROBERT A. WILLIAMS, JR., LIKE A LOADED WEAPON: THE REHNQUIST COURT, INDIAN RIGHTS, AND THE LEGAL HISTORY OF RACISM IN AMERICA (2005); Robert N. Clinton, There is No Federal Supremacy Clause for Indian Tribes, 34 ARIZ. ST. L. J. 113 (2002); Philip P. Frickey, (Native) American Exceptionalism in Federal Public Law, 119 HARV. L. REV. 431 (2005); Gloria Valencia-Weber, The Supreme Court's Indian Law Decisions: Deviations from Constitutional Principles and the Crafting of Judicial Smallpox Blankets, 5 U. PA. J. CONST. L. 405 (2003).

⁵⁰ United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193 (2004), rev'g, 324 F.3d 635 (8th Cir. 2003) (en banc).

⁵¹ Oral Argument of Appellant, Prescott v. Little Six, Inc., 387 F.3d 753 (8th Cir. 2004) (quoting Judge Wollman at 14:51 of oral argument – "[T]he Supreme Court sort of makes it up as they go along."), cert. denied, 544 U.S. 1032 (2005).

⁵² E.g., Getches, Beyond Indian Law, supra note __, at 320-21, 329-30, 344; John P. LaVelle, Sanctioning a Tyranny: The Diminishment of Ex parte Young, Expansion of Hans the Court disfavors minority rights and follows an “anti-anti-discrimination” pattern.⁵³ Others argue that the Supreme Court is engaged in a pattern of race discrimination against tribal interests.⁵⁴ Some assert that the Court’s Indian law jurisprudence is based on knee-jerk reactions against the notion of a third type of sovereign government existing within the United States.⁵⁵ Still other commentators argue that the foundational principles of federal Indian law are so based in racism and stereotype as to have tainted all modern Indian law decisions.⁵⁶ Another vein of commentary deplores the inefficiencies resulting from the Court’s apparent ad hoc decision making in the field.⁵⁷ There is no shortage of criticism of the Court’s apparent deviation from the foundational principles of federal Indian law and of an apparent deviation from the Court’s role of protecting the Nation’s minorities from the injustices perpetrated by federal, state, and local governments.⁵⁸

Immunity, and Denial of Indian Rights in Coeur d’Alene Tribe, 31 ARIZ. ST. L. J. 787, 863-64 (1997). On the “federalism revolution,” see generally MARK TUSHNET, A COURT DIVIDED: THE REHNQUIST COURT AND THE FUTURE OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 249-78 (2005); Larry D. Kramer, Foreword: We the Court, 115 HARV. L. REV. 4, 129 (2001) (coining the phrase).

⁵³ E.g., Getches, Beyond Indian Law, supra note __, at 318-20. For an argument that the Court follows an “anti-anti-discrimination agenda,” see RUBENFELD, REVOLUTION BY JUDICIARY, supra note __, at 158-83.

⁵⁴ E.g., WILLIAMS, LIKE A LOADED WEAPON, supra note __; Joseph William Singer, Canons of Conquest: The Supreme Court’s Attack on Tribal Sovereignty, 37 NEW ENG. L. REV. 641 (2003).

⁵⁵ E.g., CHARLES F. WILKINSON, AMERICAN INDIANS, TIME, AND THE LAW: NATIVE SOCIETIES IN MODERN CONSTITUTIONAL DEMOCRACY 43 (1987) (arguing that the Court decided at least one major Indian law case based on its “visceral reaction” to the facts, citing Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978)).

⁵⁶ E.g., WILLIAMS, LIKE A LOADED WEAPON, supra note __; Robert B. Porter, The Meaning of Indigenous Nation Sovereignty, 34 ARIZ. ST. L. J. 75 (2002); Robert A. Williams, Jr., The Algebra of Federal Indian Law: The Hard Trail of Decolonizing and Americanizing the White Man’s Jurisprudence, 1986 WIS. L. REV. 219.

⁵⁷ E.g., Matthew L.M. Fletcher, Reviving Local Tribal Control in Indian Country, 53 FED. LAW., March/April 2005, at 38; Getches, Beyond Indian Law, supra note __, at 277-78; Andrew C. Mergen & Sylvia F. Liu, A Misplaced Sensitivity: The Draft Opinions in Wyoming v. United States, 68 U. COLO. L. REV. 683, 744-45 (1997). See generally Joseph William Singer, Property and Coercion in Federal Indian Law: The Conflict between Critical and Complacent Pragmatism, 63 S. CAL. L. REV. 1201 (1990).

⁵⁸ E.g., Kristen A. Carpenter, Interpreting Indian Country in State of Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie, 35 TULSA L. J. 73, 101-02 (1999); Frickey, (Native) American Exceptionalism, supra note __, at 452-60; Angela R. Riley, “Straight Stealing”: Towards an Indigenous System of Cultural Property Protection, 80 WASH. L. REV. 69, 118-19 (2005); Singer, Canons of Conquest, supra note __, at 643. See generally Gloria Valencia-Weber, Racial Equality: Old and New Strains and American Indians, 80 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 333 (2004).

An additional factor that makes these cases difficult for tribal advocates and Indian law scholars to stomach is the consistent high rate at which the Supreme Court grants petitions for writ of certiorari in cases featuring Indian tribes, tribal organizations, and Indian interests. Since the advent of the “modern era” of federal Indian law in 1959,⁵⁹ few Terms of the Court have passed without at least one major decision featuring tribal interests. Many Terms feature several cases, in some as many as five.⁶⁰ Even as Chief Justices Rehnquist and Roberts lead a Court that hears a smaller and smaller docket,⁶¹ tribal interests continue to be decided before the Court at the same proportional rate.⁶² Coupling this fact with the low win rate for tribal interests has compelled tribal advocates to avoid appearing before the Court at all. A great victory for Indian Country in the 21st century consists of convincing the Court not to grant certiorari.⁶³

Since the 2000 Term, the Court has decided several other cases against tribal interests. Three are of import for purposes of this Article – Inyo County v. Bishop Paiute,⁶⁴ Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation v. Wagnon,⁶⁵ and, perhaps the most important and destabilizing decision in modern federal Indian law, City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation.⁶⁶ These cases exemplify the very recent degradation of the foundations of federal Indian law by the ⁵⁹ WILKINSON, AMERICAN INDIANS, TIME, AND THE LAW, supra note __, at 1 (naming Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217 (1959), as the onset of the “modern era” of federal Indian law).

⁶⁰ See supra note __.

⁶¹ Compare The Statistics, 119 HARV. L. REV. 415, 426 (2005) (noting that the Court decided 80 cases in the 2004 Term), with Leading Cases, 100 HARV. L. REV. 100, 304 (1986) (noting that the Court decided 159 cases in the 1986 Term); see also Posner, supra note __, at 35 (“The number of decisions reviewable by the Court is growing; the number of decisions reviewed by the Court is declining.”); Greenhouse, In Steps Big and Small, supra note __, at A1 (reporting that the Court decided 69 cases in the October 2006 Term, the lowest number since 1953).

⁶² In the 2005 Term, the Court heard Arizona v. California, 126 S. Ct. 1543 (2006), and Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005). In the 2004 Term, the Court heard City of Sherrill, N.Y. v. Oneida Indian Nation of N.Y., 544 U.S. 197 (2005), and Cherokee Nation of Okla. v. Leavitt, 543 U.S. 631 (2005). In the 2003 Term, the Court heard South Fla. Water Mgmt. Dist. v. Seminole Tribe of Fla., 541 U.S. 95 (2004), and United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193 (2004). In the 2002 Term, the Court heard Inyo County, Cal. v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Indian Community of the Bishop Colony, 538 U.S. 701 (2003), United States v. Navajo Nation, 537 U.S. 488 (2003), and United States v. White Mountain Apache Tribe, 537 U.S. 465 (2003).

⁶³ See Matthew L.M. Fletcher, Means case a supreme affirmation of tribal sovereignty, INDIAN COUNTRY TODAY, Oct. 20, 2006, at A3, available at <http://www.indiancountry.com/content.cfm?id=1096413861>.

⁶⁴ 538 U.S. 701 (2003).

⁶⁵ 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005).

⁶⁶ 544 U.S. 197 (2005).

Supreme Court, but they are mere extensions of a longer trend that can be traced back to the appointment of Justice Rehnquist to the Court in 1971 and his elevation to Chief Justice in 1986.⁶⁷ While as Chief Justice, he did not write the lead opinions in many Indian law decisions, the doctrinal origins of these cases can be traced back to the damage done by then-Justice Rehnquist in the 1970s and early 1980s to foundational principles of federal Indian law.⁶⁸

Then-Justice Rehnquist's Indian law jurisprudence stretches back to Moe v. Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Indian Reservation.⁶⁹ In that case, Justice Rehnquist rewrote the presumptions and the analytic framework to which the Court had been faithful since the beginning of the modern era, Williams v. Lee.⁷⁰ Justice Rehnquist's Indian law cases reversed presumptions in favor of tribal immunities to state regulation and taxation;⁷¹ replaced bright-line rules favoring tribal interests with balancing tests favoring states and local governments;⁷² eliminated tribal criminal jurisdiction over nonmembers;⁷³ eviscerated tribal civil jurisdiction over nonmembers;⁷⁴ and limited both the federal trust responsibility toward Indian tribes⁷⁵ and the canons of construing Indian treaties and statutes to the benefit of Indians and Indian tribes.⁷⁶ Then-Justice Rehnquist's efforts in this new Indian law jurisprudence did not appear to provide a reasonable theory for the decisions or the departures from the hallowed foundational principles of federal Indian law. Unfortunately, his attitude about Indians and Indian peoples perhaps can be summed up in his solitary and pithy dissent in United States v. Sioux Nation,⁷⁷ where he accused the majority of engaging in "revisionist history" by asserting that the Sioux Indians were backstabbing savages.⁷⁸

⁶⁷ See GEOFFREY R. STONE, LOUIS MICHAEL SEIDMAN, CASS R. SUNSTEIN, MARK V. TUSHNET, AND PAMELA S. KARLAN, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW lxxiii (5th ed. 2005).

⁶⁸ See generally BARSH & HENDERSON, supra note __, at 192-95; WILLIAMS, LIKE A LOADED WEAPON, supra note __, at 97-113; Johnson & Martinis, supra note __.

⁶⁹ 425 U.S. 463 (1976).

⁷⁰ 358 U.S. 217 (1959).

⁷¹ E.g., Moe, 425 U.S. at 475-83.

⁷² E.g., id.

⁷³ See Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978).

⁷⁴ See Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 544, 565-66 (1981).

⁷⁵ E.g., United States v. Cherokee Nation, 480 U.S. 700, 707-08 (1987); Nevada v. United States, 463 U.S. 110, 127-28 (1983).

⁷⁶ E.g., Rosebud Sioux Tribe v. Kneip, 430 U.S. 584, 586-605 (1977).

⁷⁷ 448 U.S. 371, 424 (1980) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting); WILLIAMS, LIKE A LOADED WEAPON, supra note __, at 118-22.

⁷⁸ Sioux Nation, 448 U.S. at 435 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting); id. at 437 (quoting SAMUEL ELIOT MORISON, THE OXFORD HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE 539-40 (1965)).

These cases formed a base that have made the Court's federal Indian law decisions since the ascension of Chief Justice Rehnquist easy cases for the Court, with many of the most damaging cases being unanimous decisions.⁷⁹ While some may now question the Rehnquist Court's success in its so-called "federalism revolution"⁸⁰ and other areas where it rolled back the jurisprudence of the Warren Court,⁸¹ there is a strong argument that the Rehnquist Court did accomplish one very clear task – killing federal Indian law.

This Part offers a description of federal Indian law as it once was and how it is now after the end of the Rehnquist Court. These are two very different eras of federal Indian law.

A. Foundational Principles of Federal Indian Law

The true foundation of all of federal Indian law includes the treaties executed by Indian tribes and the federal government, alongside the thousands of Acts of Congress relating to Indians and Indian tribes and thousands of federal regulations promulgated by federal agencies administering American Indian policy. In 1941, Felix and Lucy Cohen collected the entire body of treaties, statutes, and regulations and reduced them into one massive comprehensive treatise – the Handbook of Federal Indian Law, published by the United States Department of Interior.⁸² The Handbook remains today the standard-bearer for the collection of federal statutory and treaty law applicable to Indians and Indian tribes, but it also remains the clearest source of the general principles and specific rules of federal Indian law. The Handbook and its successors (with one notable exception⁸³) constitute one of the most successful treatises in American law.⁸⁴

⁷⁹ E.g., Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353 (2001); Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie Tribal Government, 522 U.S. 520 (1998).

⁸⁰ E.g., Kathleen M. Sullivan, From States' Rights Blues to Blue States' Rights: Federalism after the Rehnquist Court, 75 FORDHAM L. REV. 799, 800 (2006).

⁸¹ E.g., Yale Kamisar, The Warren Court (Was It Really So Defense-Minded?), The Burger Court (Is It Really So Prosecution-Oriented?), and Police Investigatory Practices, in THE BURGER COURT: THE COUNTER-REVOLUTION THAT WASN'T 62 (Vincent Blasi ed., 1983); Yale Kamisar, The Warren Court and Criminal Justice: A Quarter-Century Retrospective, 31 TULSA L.J. 1 (1995).

⁸² FELIX S. COHEN, HANDBOOK OF FEDERAL INDIAN LAW (1942) (hereinafter COHEN, HANDBOOK 1942 ED.); see also Lucy Kramer Cohen, Felix Cohen and the Adoption of the IRA, in INDIAN SELF-RULE: FIRST-HAND ACCOUNTS OF INDIAN-WHITE RELATIONS FROM ROOSEVELT TO REAGAN 70, 70-72 (Kenneth R. Philp, ed. 1986).

⁸³ The 1958 edition was the product of Termination Era Department of Justice attorneys to revise the Handbook – often without new or additional precedent – to reach conclusions opposite to (or limiting) the original conclusions favoring tribal sovereignty and Indian rights. See Vine Deloria, Jr., Book Review, 54 U. COLO. L. REV. 121, 123-24 (1982) (reviewing

So much of federal Indian law is the federal law announced by the Supreme Court.⁸⁵ Much of the basis for federal Indian law derives from what Charles Wilkinson called the Marshall Trilogy of cases⁸⁶ – Johnson v. M’Intosh,⁸⁷ Cherokee Nation v. Georgia,⁸⁸ and Worcester v. Georgia.⁸⁹ Chief Justice Marshall’s majority opinions in Johnson and Worcester, alongside his lead opinion in Cherokee Nation, both declared several critical and longstanding common law principles regarding the relationship between the federal government, states, and Indian tribes and provided a template for analyzing and interpreting the law in relation to disputes between the three sovereigns.⁹⁰ The holdings of the cases, while significant, nonetheless are secondary to the reasoning of the cases, as Justice Baldwin asserted in his Cherokee Nation concurrence.⁹¹

Johnson famously adopted the Doctrine of Discovery as the foundation for land titles in the United States.⁹² The Court held that Indian tribes did not own the land upon which they lived and used, but instead the European nations and their American successors acquired fee simple title in the land by virtue of discovering the land.⁹³ The Court announced that Indian COHEN’S HANDBOOK 1982 ED.); Ralph W. Johnson, Indian Tribes and the Legal System, 72 WASH. L. REV. 1021, 1036-37 (1997).

⁸⁴ The original edition (1942) has been cited by state and federal courts upwards of 200 times; the 1982 edition has been cited over 400 times; and the 2005 edition has already been cited several times by federal and state courts. The disgraced (disgraceful) 1958 edition was cited over 100 times; however, many of these citations were to non-controversial portions of the Handbook.

⁸⁵ See CHARLES K. BURDICK, THE LAW OF THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION: ITS ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT § 107, at 313 (1922) (“These [constitutional provisions] leave untouched the general field of constitutional power to deal with Indian affairs, and it has been necessary for the Supreme Court to build up here a very considerable body of unwritten constitutional law.”; citing the Indian Commerce Clause and the Indians Not Taxed Clauses).

⁸⁶ WILKINSON, AMERICAN INDIANS, TIME, AND THE LAW, supra note ___, at 24.

⁸⁷ 21 U.S. 543 (1823).

⁸⁸ 30 U.S. 1 (1831).

⁸⁹ 31 U.S. 515 (1832).

⁹⁰ See generally Matthew L.M. Fletcher, The Iron Cold of the Marshall Trilogy, 82 N.D. L. REV. 627, 648-74 (2006).

⁹¹ Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 32 (Baldwin, J., concurring).

⁹² Johnson, 21 U.S. at 573. The case is a foundational case in most first-year property classes, appearing as one of the first cases excerpted in property casebooks. E.g. JESSE DUKEMINIER, JAMES E. KRIER, GREGORY S. ALEXANDER & MICHAEL H. SCHILL, PROPERTY 3-9 (6th ed. 2006); JOSEPH WILLIAM SINGER, PROPERTY 4-13 (4th ed. 2006). See also JUAN F. PEREA, RICHARD DELGADO, ANGELA P. HARRIS & STEPHANIE M. WILDMAN, RACE AND RACES: CASES AND RESOURCES FOR A DIVERSE AMERICA 175-78 (2000).

⁹³ Johnson, 21 U.S. at 574. For background on whether the Doctrine of Discovery did confer fee title or a mere preemption right prior to Johnson, please compare ROBERT J. MILLER, NATIVE AMERICA, DISCOVERED AND CONQUERED: THOMAS JEFFERSON, LEWIS AND tribes did have the right of possession and use, a right that could be extinguished only by the federal government through purchase or conquest.⁹⁴ Johnson became the first instance of what the Court now calls “implicit divestiture,”⁹⁵ or a finding by the Court that an aspect of tribal inherent sovereignty has been divested⁹⁶ – not by an express Act of Congress⁹⁷ – but by implication through the lens of federal policy and national necessity⁹⁸ or, as the Court later stated, as a result of the dependency of Indian tribes upon

CLARK, AND MANIFEST DESTINY (2006) (asserting fee title), with LINDSAY G. ROBERTSON, CONQUEST BY LAW: HOW THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA DISPOSSESSED INDIGENOUS PEOPLES OF THEIR LANDS (2005) (asserting preemption right).

⁹⁴ Johnson, 21 U.S. at 574.

⁹⁵ See United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 326 (1978) (defining “implicit divestiture” as “that part of sovereignty which the Indian implicitly lost by virtue of their dependent status”). For commentary on “implicit divestiture,” please see Bethany R. Berger, Justice and the Outsider: Jurisdiction over Nonmembers in Tribal Legal Systems, 37 ARIZ. ST. L. J. 1047, 1053-67 (2006); Bethany R. Berger, “Power over this Unfortunate Race”: Race, Politics and Indian Law in United States v. Rogers, 45 WM. & MARY L. REV. 1957, 2046-49 (2004); N. Bruce Duthu, Implicit Divestiture of Tribal Powers: Locating Legitimate Sources of Authority in Indian Country, 19 AM. INDIAN L. REV. 353, 371 (1994); Philip P. Frickey, A Common Law for Our Age of Colonialism: A Judicial Divestiture of Indian Tribal Authority Over Nonmembers, 109 YALE L. J. 1, 43-48 (1999); Philip P. Frickey, Marshalling Past and Present: Colonialism, Constitutionalism, and Interpretation in Federal Indian Law, 107 HARV. L. REV. 381, 393-437 n. 243 (1993); Philip P. Frickey, Congressional Intent, Practical Reasoning, and the Dynamic Nature of Federal Indian Law, 78 CAL. L. REV. 1137, 1160-64 (1990); David H. Getches, Conquering the Cultural Frontier: The New Subjectivism of the Supreme Court in Indian Law, 84 CAL. L. REV. 1573, 1595-1617 (1996); Robert Laurence, The Dominant Society’s Judicial Reluctance to Allow Tribal Civil Law to Apply to Non-Indians: Reservation Diminishment, Modern Demography and the Indian Civil Rights Act, 30 U. RICH. L. REV. 781, 800-05 (1996); Alex Tallchief Skibine, The Court’s Use of the Implicit Divestiture Doctrine to Implement its Imperfect Notion of Federalism in Indian Country, 36 TULSA L.J. 267, 270-80 (2000).

⁹⁶ See Johnson, 21 U.S. at 574 (“In the establishment of these relations, the rights of the original inhabitants were, in no instance, entirely disregarded; but were necessarily, to a considerable extent, impaired.”) (emphasis added).

⁹⁷ See Merrion v. Jicarilla Apache Tribe, 445 U.S. 130, 148 (1983) (“Only the Federal Government may limit a tribe’s exercise of its sovereign authority.”) (citing United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 322 (1978)).

⁹⁸ See Washington v. Colville Confederated Tribes, 447 U.S. 134, 153 (1980) (“Tribal powers are not implicitly divested by virtue of the tribes’ dependent status. This Court has found such a divestiture in cases where the exercise of tribal sovereignty would be inconsistent with the overriding interests of the National Government, as when the tribes seek to engage in foreign relations, alienate their lands to non-Indians without federal consent, or prosecute non-Indians in tribal courts which do not accord the full protections of the Bill of Rights.”) (emphasis added).

the federal government.⁹⁹ Johnson recognized that history plays an important role in contextualizing Indian cases.¹⁰⁰

The second case in the Trilogy, Cherokee Nation,¹⁰¹ held that Indian tribes were not “foreign nations” as used in the Constitution for purposes of the Court’s original jurisdiction.¹⁰² The opinion held that Indian tribes did retain aspects of nationality and created the label “domestic dependent nations” for Indian tribes, a label that sticks today.¹⁰³ The holding itself is very narrow, with Chief Justice Marshall’s opinion being curt and somewhat conclusory.¹⁰⁴ Only one other Justice joined his lead opinion. Critical to the holding was the conclusion that Indian tribes are “dependent” on the United States, a conclusion reached through an interpretation of the Cherokee Nation’s treaties where they consented to be “dependent” upon the United States for military protection.¹⁰⁵ Two Justices wrote stinging concurrences arguing that Indians and Indian tribes were too degraded and insignificant to meet the international law definition of “nation” at all and agreeing that Indian tribes were dependent.¹⁰⁶ Justice Thompson, joined by Justice Story, later added a dissent that argued for finding that Indian tribes such as the Cherokee Nation are foreign nations, whether understood to be so by the Founders or not.¹⁰⁷ Applying international law principles, the dissent argued that the Cherokee Nation did not lose its status as a foreign nation by virtue of agreeing to be dependent on the United States for military protection any more than (using more contemporary analogs) Monaco or the Vatican loses its status as a nation by virtue of their military dependence on their host countries.¹⁰⁸

The final piece of the Trilogy is Worcester,¹⁰⁹ where Chief Justice Marshall’s opinion garnered a 5-1 majority holding that the laws of the State of Georgia do not extend into Indian Country where they conflict with federal ⁹⁹ See United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 229 (2004) (Souter, J., dissenting) (quoting United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 323 (1978)); Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353, 359 (2001) (quoting Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 544, 564 (1981)).

¹⁰⁰ See Fletcher, The Iron Cold, supra note ___, at 677-81.

¹⁰¹ 30 U.S. 1 (1831).

¹⁰² Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 20.

¹⁰³ Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 17.

¹⁰⁴ See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 15-20; Fletcher, The Iron Cold, supra note ___, at 639-42.

¹⁰⁵ See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 17-18; Fletcher, The Iron Cold, supra note ___, at 649-54.

¹⁰⁶ See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 20 (Johnson, J., concurring); id. at 31 (Baldwin, J., concurring).

¹⁰⁷ See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 50 (Thompson, J., dissenting).

¹⁰⁸ See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 53 (Thompson, J., dissenting).

¹⁰⁹ 31 U.S. 515 (1832).

laws or Indian treaties. Worcester laid the framework for analyzing disputes involving Indian tribes by looking first and foremost to Indian treaties¹¹⁰ and then Acts of Congress.¹¹¹ The opinion departed from Cherokee Nation's labeling of Indian tribes as "domestic dependent nations" and adopted the reasoning of the dissenters in Cherokee Nation, dropping the label "domestic dependent nation" in favor of "distinct, independent political communities."¹¹² Of course, Chief Justice Marshall retired a few years later and no later opinion adopted this phrase or extended the reasoning. In the last few decades, the Court almost never cites Worcester for any proposition other than the undisputed tenet that tribes retain some sovereignty.¹¹³ In the Court's phrasing, it has long ago departed from the "platonic notion" that state law has no force in Indian Country.¹¹⁴

Critical foundational principles of federal Indian law originated with the Trilogy. First, Indian tribes and individual Indians did not own their traditional and aboriginal territories in fee simple – the United States did.¹¹⁵ Second, federal authority in the field of Indian affairs is both plenary (by virtue of Indian dependency) and exclusive (by virtue of federal constitutional supremacy).¹¹⁶ Third, Indian tribes are nations and retain their sovereign

¹¹⁰ See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 547 (interpreting the treaty term, "protection"); id. at 553-54 (interpreting the treaty term, "manage all their affairs").

¹¹¹ See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 540-41 (reviewing the Trade and Intercourse Acts).

¹¹² Worcester, 31 U.S. at 557-58.

¹¹³ Citations to Worcester's principles now are made more often in dissent. E.g., Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 149 n. 40 (1996) (Souter, J., dissenting); Hagen v. Utah, 510 U.S. 399, 423 n. 2 (1994) (Blackmun, J., dissenting); Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak and Circle Village, 501 U.S. 775, 791, 792, 795 (1991) (Blackmun, J., dissenting); Duro v. Reina, 495 U.S. 676, 705 n. 3 (1990) (Brennan, J., dissenting).

¹¹⁴ Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353, 361 (2001) (quoting White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 448 U.S. 136, 141 (1980), and Worcester, 31 U.S. at 561); see also Kiowa Tribe of Oklahoma v. Manufacturing Technologies, Inc., 523 U.S. 751, 762 n. 2 (1998) (Stevens, J., dissenting) ("The general notion drawn from Chief Justice Marshall's opinion in Worcester ..., that an Indian reservation is a distinct nation within whose boundaries state law cannot penetrate, has yielded to closer analysis when confronted, in the course of subsequent developments, with diverse concrete situations.") (quoting Organized Village of Kake v. Egan, 369 U.S. 60, 72 (1962); other citations omitted); County of Yakima v. Confederated Tribes and Bands of the Yakima Indian Nation, 502 U.S. 251, 256 (1992) (quoting Worcester 31 U.S. at 556-57, but then asserting, "The platonic notions of Indian sovereignty that guided Chief Justice Marshall have, over time, lost their independent sway.") (quotation marks and citations omitted); Brendale, 492 U.S. at 451 nn. 1-2 (Blackmun, concurring and dissenting); South Carolina v. Catawba Indian Tribe, Inc., 476 U.S. 498, 527 (1986) (Blackmun, J., dissenting).

¹¹⁵ See Johnson, 21 U.S. at 574.

¹¹⁶ See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 557-58, 561.

authority except as limited by the federal government.¹¹⁷ Other less significant but important questions originated in the Trilogy as well. For one, the Court held that Indian treaties must be interpreted as the Indians would have understood them.¹¹⁸ While the Court is not always faithful to this canon of construction – even in the Trilogy¹¹⁹ – the rule is an important part of federal Indian law and even extends to the interpretation of statutes enacted for the benefit of Indians or Indian tribes.¹²⁰ For another, the Court’s conclusions about tribal dependency and weakness provided the theoretical basis for the special relationship between Indian tribes and the federal government, a relationship often referred to as a trust relationship.¹²¹ According to the Court, tribal dependency requires the government to treat Indians and tribes with special fairness and consideration.¹²² While the Court often refused to condemn federal government actions that appeared to violate this special trust relationship,¹²³ the concept remains an important part of federal Indian law and federal Indian policy to this day.¹²⁴

B. The Erosion of the Foundation

Much like the Contracts Clause jurisprudence of the Marshall Court,¹²⁵ the Marshall Court’s Indian law jurisprudence has eroded over time, although it took a much longer time. The Court’s decisions of the past 20 years, in particular, have been at odds with the foundational principles as articulated by the Marshall Court, but the Court has not gone so far as to ¹¹⁷ See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 15-20; COHEN, HANDBOOK 1942 ED., supra note ___, at 122.

¹¹⁸ See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 546-47.

¹¹⁹ See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 17-18 (interpreting the treaty term “protection” to the detriment of the Cherokee Nation).

¹²⁰ See COHEN’S HANDBOOK 2005 ED., supra note ___, § 2.02, at 119-128. But cf. Chickasaw Nation v. United States, 534 U.S. 84, 95 (2001) (“Nor can one say that the pro-Indian canon is inevitably stronger—particularly where the interpretation of a congressional statute rather than an Indian treaty is at issue.”).

¹²¹ See COHEN’S HANDBOOK 2005 ED., supra note ___, § 5.04[4], at 418-23.

¹²² E.g., United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 384 (1886).

¹²³ E.g., Tee-Hit-Ton Indians v. United States, 348 U.S. 272 (1955) (refusing to require the United States to pay just compensation for taking of tribal property); Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U.S. 553 (1903) (allowing Congress to unilaterally abrogate Indian treaty).

¹²⁴ See COHEN’S HANDBOOK 2005 ED., supra note ___, § 5.04[4][a], at 419 (“Today the trust doctrine is one of the cornerstones of Indian law.”).

¹²⁵ See generally Horace H. Hagan, Dartmouth College Case, 19 GEO. L. J. 411 (1931); Horace H. Hagan, Fletcher v. Peck, 16 GEO. L. J. 1 (1927); Stewart E. Sterk, The Continuity of Legislatures: Of Contracts and the Contracts Clause, 88 COLUM. L. REV. 647, 648, 685-86 (1988) (acknowledging that many commentators believed the contracts clause was “dead” from the Depression era until the 1970s or 1980s).

overrule any of the cases in the Trilogy.¹²⁶ In fact, as some scholars suggest, the Court appears to take the easy way out by simply ignoring those foundational cases.¹²⁷ This recent jurisprudence appears sloppy, leading some scholars to suggest that the Rehnquist Court was laden with animus toward Indians and tribes.¹²⁸ As the Court itself sometimes recognizes, its decisions in the field are contradictory or even schizophrenic.¹²⁹ The Court appears very uncomfortable and suspicious of Indian tribes because the Constitution does not incorporate them into Our Federalism¹³⁰ and, as a result, the Court's supervisory power over tribal courts is very limited.¹³¹ The Court also appears very uncomfortable with federal plenary and exclusive power over Indian affairs where the single provision in the Constitution that authorizes federal control only relates to commerce with Indian tribes.¹³² Perhaps most ¹²⁶ See Hope M. Babcock, A Civic-Republican Vision of "Domestic Dependent Nations" in the Twenty-First Century: Tribal Sovereignty Re-Envisioned, Reinvigorated, and Re-Empowered, 2005 UTAH L. REV. 443, 471.

¹²⁷ Cf. Getches, Conquering the Cultural Frontier, supra note ___, at 1594, 1654.

¹²⁸ See generally WILLIAMS, LIKE A LOADED WEAPON, supra note ___, at 131-33 (arguing that at least some the Court's Members are "adversive racists," persons who make racist decisions without ever admitting or even acknowledging their racism).

¹²⁹ Cf. United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 219 (2004) (Thomas, J., concurring). See generally Robert Laurence, Don't Think of a Hippopotamus: An Essay on First-Year Contracts, Earthquake Prediction, Gun Control in Baghdad, The Indian Civil Rights Act, The Clean Water Act, and Justice Thomas's Separate Opinion in United States v. Lara, 40 TULSA L. REV. 137, 148 (2004) ("It is my opinion, of course, that it is possible to hold two contradictory thoughts in one's mind at one time, and that the complexity of the law requires it. Of course, American Indian law is schizophrenic. So is the Clean Water Act. So is the common law of contracts. So is the war in Iraq."); Skibine, The Court's Use of the Implicit Divestiture Doctrine, supra note ___, at 267 ("With two hundred years worth of un-discarded baggage, and antiquated and often contradictory theories, the Supreme Court's current jurisprudence in the field of federal Indian law has mystified both academics and practitioners.").

¹³⁰ See, e.g., United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 218-19 (2004) (Thomas, J., concurring). See generally Richard A. Monette, A New Federalism for Indian Tribes: The Relationship between the United States and Tribes in Light of Our Federalism and Republican Democracy, 25 U. TOL. L. REV. 617 (1994); Alex Tallchief Skibine, Dualism and the Dialogic of Incorporation in Federal Indian Law, 119 HARV. L. REV. F. 28 (2005); Alex Tallchief Skibine, Redefining the Status of Indian Tribes within "Our Federalism": Beyond the Dependency Paradigm, 38 CONN. L. REV. 667 (2006); Alex Tallchief Skibine, The Dialogic of Federalism in Federal Indian Law and the Rehnquist Court: The Need for Coherence and Integration, 8 TEX. F. ON C.L. & C.R. 1 (2003).

¹³¹ See, e.g., National Farmers Union Ins. Cos v. Crow Tribe, 471 U.S. 845 (1985) (holding that a federal court may have jurisdiction over tribal court cases but only to the extent necessary to decide tribal court jurisdiction); Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49 (1978) (holding that the Indian Civil Rights Act did not create a cause of action in federal courts except in criminal cases).

¹³² See, e.g., United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 215 (2004) (Thomas, J., concurring).

importantly, as Professor Phil Frickey argues, the Court is uncomfortable with being unable to reconcile federal Indian law with the rest of its constitutional jurisprudence.¹³³

One can make a reasonable argument that the Court's decisions in the field from 1832's Worcester v. Georgia until 1959's Williams v. Lee amounted to little more than an interregnum where the Court announced very little federal Indian law. That period could be best be characterized as a period in which an incredible, rich, and devastating history of federal Indian policy landed on Indian people¹³⁴ while the Court stood by and watched like the house by the side of the road (as Ernie Harwell would say), citing to the political question doctrine whenever a difficult Indian law question arose.¹³⁵

But Williams offered a dramatic interruption of that period in a short opinion by Justice Black that recognized the exclusive authority of tribal courts to adjudicate matters arising out of Indian Country.¹³⁶ The holding in Williams was consistent with the Trilogy's foundational principles that state law did not extend into Indian Country and that Indian tribes retain aspects of sovereignty not expressly divested by Congress.¹³⁷ The result helped to vitalize the development of tribal courts and tribal governments,¹³⁸ a development that continues today at an impressive rate.¹³⁹

In the first part of the modern era from 1959 to about 1986, a time I have called the "permissive modern era,"¹⁴⁰ tribal interests were victorious

¹³³ See generally Frickey, (Native) American Exceptionalism, supra note ____.

¹³⁴ See COHEN'S HANDBOOK 2005 ED., supra note __, §§ 1.03[4]-1.06, at 45-96 (describing federal Indian policy from 1815 to 1961).

¹³⁵ E.g., Tee-Hit-Ton Indians v. United States, 348 U.S. 272, 281 (1955); Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U.S. 553, 565-66 (1903); Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U.S. 294, 308 (1902); United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 383 (1886); United States v. Holliday, 70 U.S. 407, 419 (1865). Cf. Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, 193 U.S. 127, 144 (1904) (holding that dispute between Indian tribes is tribal political question not subject to federal court review); Roff v. Burney, 168 U.S. 218, 222 (1897) (holding that a tribal membership dispute is a tribal political question).

¹³⁶ 358 U.S. 217, 220-21 (1959).

¹³⁷ See Worcester v. Georgia, 31 U.S. 515, 560-61 (1832).

¹³⁸ Cf. FRANK POMMERSHEIM, BRAID OF FEATHERS: AMERICAN INDIAN LAW AND CONTEMPORARY TRIBAL LIFE 91 (1995) (noting that tribes have "an enduring responsibility to provide a local forum for adjudication of cases").

¹³⁹ See generally B.J. Jones, Welcoming Tribal Courts into the Judicial Fraternity: Emerging Issues in Tribal-State and Tribal-Federal Court Relations, 24 WM. MITCHELL L. REV. 457 (1998); Nell Jessup Newton, Tribal Court Praxis: One Year in the Life of Twenty Indian Tribal Courts, 22 AM. INDIAN L. REV. 285 (1998); Frank Pommersheim, Tribal Courts and the Federal Judiciary: Opportunities and Challenges for a Constitutional Democracy, 58 MONT. L. REV. 313 (1997).

¹⁴⁰ Matthew L.M. Fletcher, The Legal Culture War against Tribal Law, 2 INTERCULTURAL HUM. RTS. L. REV. 93, 99-101 (2007).

before the Court in a large majority of cases. Professor Alex Skibine estimated recently that tribal interests won just under 60 percent of their cases before the Court during this time.¹⁴¹ While there were significant losses later in the period, such as Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe,¹⁴² Montana v. United States,¹⁴³ and *Washington v. Colville Confederated Tribes*¹⁴⁴ (all of which were driven by Justice Rehnquist), the Court abided by the Trilogy's foundational principles in large measure. The Court's decisions in the area of taxation – cases such as *Central Machinery v. Arizona Tax Commission*¹⁴⁵ and *Merrion v. Jicarilla Apache Tribe*¹⁴⁶ – recognized the general rule of tribal immunity from state taxation and recognized the inherent sovereign authority of Indian tribes to tax those within their jurisdictions. United States v. Wheeler cemented tribal criminal jurisdiction over tribal members in Indian Country.¹⁴⁷ That case also reaffirmed that tribal governments are separate sovereigns.¹⁴⁸ And Justice Marshall's decision in National Farmers Union Ins. Cos. in 1985 provided a framework for the eventual recognition of tribal court judgments in federal court.¹⁴⁹

Several surprising, even disturbing, lines of cases followed the ascension of Chief Justice Rehnquist in 1986. A superficial review of these decisions is helpful for now.

First, the Court began to reinterpret its 1981 decision, Montana v. United States,¹⁵⁰ to expand its meaning far beyond the very narrow fact situation presented in that case.¹⁵¹ The Court's decisions in *Brendale v. Confederated Tribes and Bands of the Yakima Indian Reservation*¹⁵² and *South Dakota v. Bourland*¹⁵³ served to rewrite the relationship between Indian tribes and nonmembers located within their territorial jurisdiction by adopting a presumption that Indian tribes do not have jurisdiction over ¹⁴¹ See Skibine, Teaching Indian Law in an Anti-Tribal Era, supra note ___, at 781.

¹⁴² 435 U.S. 191 (1978).

¹⁴³ 450 U.S. 455 (1981).

¹⁴⁴ 447 U.S. 134 (1980).

¹⁴⁵ 448 U.S. 160 (1980).

¹⁴⁶ 455 U.S. 130 (1982).

¹⁴⁷ 435 U.S. 313, 323-24 (1978).

¹⁴⁸ Wheeler, 435 U.S. at 323.

¹⁴⁹ 471 U.S. 845, 857 & n. 25 (1985) (citing tribal court cases).

¹⁵⁰ 450 U.S. 455 (1981).

¹⁵¹ See Judith V. Royster, Montana at the Crossroads, 38 CONN. L. REV. 631, 631 (2006) (describing efforts of Justice Souter to expand the Montana general rule).

¹⁵² 492 U.S. 408 (1989).

¹⁵³ 508 U.S. 679 (1993).

nonmembers.¹⁵⁴ This is the opposite of the meaning of the Worcester case. For some commentators (and the Court), Montana is now the foundational case for the current Court, overruling by implication the Worcester decision.¹⁵⁵ The Court now treats Montana as the criminal jurisdiction parallel to Oliphant, creating the expectation that, sometime in the near future, the Court will adopt a bright-line rule eliminating civil jurisdiction over nonmembers, just as it adopted a bright-line rule in Oliphant eliminating criminal jurisdiction over nonmembers.¹⁵⁶

A concomitant result of the expansion of Montana is the deterioration of the adjudicatory jurisdiction of tribal courts that the Court is willing to recognize. In Strate v. A-1 Contractors,¹⁵⁷ perhaps the most damaging case of all the Rehnquist Court's Indian law decisions,¹⁵⁸ the Court called Montana the "pathmarking" case in the field¹⁵⁹ and sharply limited the exceptions to the Montana rule¹⁶⁰ – the so-called Montana 1 and Montana 2 exceptions.¹⁶¹ Tribal advocates had presumed that the Court would invoke the Montana 2 exception in cases where the clear focus of the case was in Indian Country,¹⁶² but instead the Strate Court all but defined the exceptions out of existence. The Court's decision in Strate came close to being the case that adopted a bright-line rule eliminating tribal civil jurisdiction over nonmembers, but the Court's decision in *Nevada v. Hicks*¹⁶³ case even closer, with Justice Souter's concurring opinion providing an argument that tribal law is "unusually difficult for an outsider to sort out" as justification for adopting the bright-line rule.¹⁶⁴

¹⁵⁴ See John P. LaVelle, Implicit Divestiture Reconsidered: Outtakes from the Cohen's Handbook Cutting Room Floor, 38 CONN. L. REV. 731, 744-47 (2006); Royster, supra note __, at 636-37; Skibine, The Court's Use of Implicit Divestiture, supra note __, at 298.

¹⁵⁵ E.g., Daan Braveman, Tribal Sovereignty: Them and Us, 82 OR. L. REV. 75, 86-87 (2003); Singer, Canons of Conquest, supra note __, at 652. See generally Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 U.S. 438, 445 (1997) (designating Montana as the "pathmarking" case).

¹⁵⁶ This is the "open question" as designated by Justice Scalia in Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353, 358 n. 2 (2001).

¹⁵⁷ 520 U.S. 438 (1997).

¹⁵⁸ Cf. Rebecca Tsosie, Tribalism, Constitutionalism, and Cultural Pluralism: Where Do Indigenous Peoples Fit within Civil Society?, 5 U. PA. J. CONST. L. 357, 384 (2003) ("The Court's opinion in Strate v. A-1 Contractors continued the conception of tribal sovereignty as one essentially limited to tribal members.").

¹⁵⁹ Strate, 520 U.S. at 445.

¹⁶⁰ See Strate, 520 U.S. at 456-59; LaVelle, Outtakes, supra note __, at 755-59.

¹⁶¹ See Montana v. United States, 450 U.S. 455, 465-66 (1981).

¹⁶² See Brief of Petitioners 8-11, Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 U.S. 438 (2001) (No. 95-1872).

¹⁶³ 533 U.S. 353 (2001).

¹⁶⁴ Hicks, 533 U.S. at 384-85 (Souter, J., concurring).

Second, in Duro v. Reina,¹⁶⁵ the Court attempted to expand its prohibition on tribal criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians, which it had already done in Oliphant,¹⁶⁶ by holding that tribes cannot have criminal jurisdiction over nonmember Indians.¹⁶⁷ Congress quickly enacted the “Duro Fix,”¹⁶⁸ but the doctrinal damage had been done. Oliphant was the first case to utilize the doctrine of implicit divestiture since the Trilogy.¹⁶⁹ Each time the Court finds that an area of tribal sovereign authority has been implicitly divested adds an amount of legitimacy to the doctrine by piling precedent on top of creaky precedent. Ironically, one could argue that the “Duro Fix” itself served to codify the practice, leaving the Court to believe that Congress acquiesces in the judicial divestiture of tribal government authority unless it enacts legislation to reverse the decisions.

Third, the Court declaring some Indian reservations disestablished, such as in South Dakota v. Yankton Sioux Tribe,¹⁷⁰ or diminished, as in Hagen v. Utah,¹⁷¹ and redefining the term “Indian Country” by making the astounding declaration that there was no Indian Country in Alaska in Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie.¹⁷² Part and parcel of these cases was the severe devaluation of the canons of construction for Indian treaties and statutes.¹⁷³

Fourth, the Court’s Indian taxation jurisprudence, based in part on a balancing test developed in part by then-Justice Rehnquist in Moe v.

¹⁶⁵ 495 U.S. 676 (1990).

¹⁶⁶ Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978).

¹⁶⁷ Duro, 495 U.S. at 688.

¹⁶⁸ See United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 197-98 (2004); Nell Jessup Newton, Permanent Legislation to Correct Duro v. Reina, 17 AM. INDIAN L. REV. 109 (1992); Alex Tallchief Skibine, Duro v. Reina and the Legislation that Overturned It: A Power Play of Constitutional Dimensions, 66 S. CAL. L. REV. 767 (1993).

¹⁶⁹ See United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 326 (1978) (listing three areas in which the Court recognized implicit divestiture: “The areas in which such implicit divestiture of sovereignty has been held to have occurred are those involving the relations between an Indian tribe and nonmembers of the tribe. Thus, Indian tribes can no longer freely alienate to non-Indians the land they occupy. [Johnson.] They cannot enter into direct commercial or governmental relations with foreign nations. [Worcester; Cherokee Nation.] And, as we have recently held, they cannot try nonmembers in tribal courts. [Oliphant.]”) (other citations omitted).

¹⁷⁰ 522 U.S. 329 (1998).

¹⁷¹ 510 U.S. 399 (1994).

¹⁷² 522 U.S. 520 (1998). For a powerful dissection of Venetie, see Carpenter, Interpreting Indian Country, supra note ____.

¹⁷³ See, e.g., Hagen, 510 U.S. at 424 (Blackmun, J., dissenting) (“Although the majority purports to apply these canons in principle, ... it ignores them in practice, resolving every ambiguity in the statutory language, legislative history, and surrounding circumstances in favor of the State and imputing to Congress, where no clear evidence of congressional intent exists, an intent to diminish the Uintah Valley Reservation.”).

Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes,¹⁷⁴ became a muddled mess as the Court, from the point of view of tribal interests, interpreted any factor as against the tribal interests. In this area, the Court looks carefully for hints that tribal interests are “marketing the exemption.”¹⁷⁵ Whenever the Court sniffs this intent, the tribal interests do not succeed.¹⁷⁶

Fifth, the Court held in City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation that equitable defenses applied in cases where Indian tribes or the United States made claims related to historical treaty rights or land dispossession.¹⁷⁷ Since that decision, and a lower court decision dismissing long-standing and powerful Indian land claims in New York state,¹⁷⁸ many Indian treaty claims may be subject to dismissal on the basis of equitable defenses. With one casual opinion in a tax case, the Court may have changed the entire face of federal Indian law, adopting a rule that it had been rejecting on a consistent basis for several decades.¹⁷⁹

In short, the last 20 years has seen the Rehnquist Court go out of its way to roll back federal Indian law jurisprudence, a new jurisprudence that benefits states, local governments, and private property owners that come into contact with tribal interests.

III. Revisiting the Indian Cases

This Article offers an argument that perhaps it is now time to recognize that the field of federal Indian law as argued before the Supreme Court is dead (but not necessarily in lower federal courts, state or tribal courts, and in other venues). Traditional scholarship and advocacy has failed to persuade the Court that its Indian cases should be decided in a different way. Perhaps at one time, the Court agreed to hear Indian cases on their own merits, but with the Court’s shrinking docket, that might no longer be the case. This Article proposes to look at the Indian law decisions of the Rehnquist Court (and now the Roberts Court) with an eye toward finding broader constitutional and pragmatic concerns that interest the Court.

¹⁷⁴ 425 U.S. 463 (1976). For a discussion of Moe, see BARSH & HENDERSON, supra note ___, at 189-96.

¹⁷⁵ Washington v. Colville Confederated Tribes, 447 U.S. 134, 155 (1980).

¹⁷⁶ E.g., Wagon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005); Dept. of Taxation and Finance of N.Y. v. Milhelm Attea & Bros. Inc., 512 U.S. 61 (1994).

¹⁷⁷ See 544 U.S. 197, 217-220 (2005).

¹⁷⁸ See Cayuga Indian Nation v. Pataki, 413 F.3d 266 (2d Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 126 S. Ct. 2022 (2006); see also Shinneock Indian Nation v. New York, 2006 WL 3501099 (E.D. N.Y., Nov. 28, 2006).

¹⁷⁹ E.g., County of Oneida v. Oneida Indian Nation, 470 U.S. 226, 253 n. 27 (1985).

A. The Shrinking Supreme Court Docket

Chief Justice Rehnquist's leadership was almost without precedent in the history of the Supreme Court. There can be no serious doubt that he brought a great deal of stability and legitimacy to a Court shaken by the erratic leadership of Chief Justice Burger. One of the salient features of the Rehnquist Court was the decline in the Court's docket. In the final Term of the Burger Court, the Court heard and decided 159 cases.¹⁸⁰ By the end of the Rehnquist Court, the Court heard and decided only about 80 cases in the 2004 Term.¹⁸¹

The Court's smaller docket is loaded with cases required to resolve a split in authority between jurisdictions, part of its oversight power over federal courts, and a few significant constitutional law cases that attract the Court's interest.¹⁸² According to Judge Posner, there tends to be one kind of case the Court now hears – “rule-imposing decisions” in which the Court attempts to “tidy up a field by announcing a crisp rule or standard.”¹⁸³ Professor Schauer argues in turn that, while the Court's ability to decide cases as it chooses remains viable, the Court's actual “agenda” (if it can be called that) was far from “the public's major issues of concern [and] the nation's first-order policy decisions...”¹⁸⁴ While at one time, Judge Posner posits, when the lower courts decided fewer cases, the Court could serve in a supervisory position over the lower courts,¹⁸⁵ the Court “has long emphasized that it is not in the business of correcting the errors of lower courts...”¹⁸⁶ Of course, these analyses beg the question – why does the Court grant certiorari in the cases it does?

Most commentators and studies suggest that an important constitutional concern drives the Court to vote to grant certiorari in many cases.¹⁸⁷ Professors George and Solimine's study of the Court's decisions to ¹⁸⁰ See Leading Cases, 100 HARV. L. REV. 100, 311 (1986).

¹⁸¹ See The Statistics, 119 HARV. L. REV. 415, 430 (2005).

¹⁸² See generally Posner, supra note __; Frederic Schauer, Foreword: The Court's Agenda – And the Nation's, 120 HARV. L. REV. 4 (2006).

¹⁸³ Posner, supra note __, at 37 (citing Roper v. Simmons, 125 S. Ct. 1183 (2005), and United States v. Booker, 125 S. Ct. 738 (2005)).

¹⁸⁴ Schauer, supra note __, at 32.

¹⁸⁵ See Posner, supra note __, at 35.

¹⁸⁶ Id. at 37.

¹⁸⁷ See SUPREME COURT RULE 10. E.g., H.W. PERRY, JR., DECIDING TO DECIDE: AGENDA SETTING IN THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT 260 (1991); Tracey E. George & Michael E. Solimine, Supreme Court Monitoring of the United States Courts of Appeals En Banc, 9 SUP. CT. ECON. REV. 171, 197-98 (2001); Lee Epstein, Jeffrey Segal & Jennifer Nicoll Victor, Dynamic Agenda-Setting on the United States Supreme Court: An Empirical Assessment, 39 HARV. J. ON LEGIS. 395 (2002); Joseph Tanenhaus et al., The Supreme Court's Certiorari Jurisdiction: Cue Theory, in JUDICIAL DECISION-MAKING 111 (Glendon Schubert ed., 1963).

grant certiorari in cases decided by the federal courts of appeals sitting en banc affirmed their hypothesis that a conservative Supreme Court is more likely to hear liberal civil rights decisions by lower courts.¹⁸⁸ Another study hypothesized and then concluded that “[b]ecause Congress cannot easily override constitutional decisions, the authors hypothesize that the justices will accept a higher proportion of constitutional cases, as opposed to statutory ones....”¹⁸⁹ The same commentators believed that “[i]n the agenda-setting context, [the Court’s] strategizing would take the form of opting out of a statutory mode and into a constitutional one, either by (1) rejecting a petition that requires her to interpret a federal act, in favor of one that raises constitutional questions; or (2) focusing on constitutional claims contained in a petition, rather than on those of a statutory nature.”¹⁹⁰ Moreover, the Court may be in a position to “create constitutional rules that are extraordinary difficult, if not impossible, for Congress to override” because of its certiorari power.¹⁹¹

What this seems to suggest is that the Court likely is not going to accept an appeal on an Indian law matter unless there is a circuit split.¹⁹² It would seem that federal Indian law on its own does not rise to the level of importance or significance – as defined by legal and political elites – to justify taking up space on the Court’s docket. Even before the Rehnquist Court began to limit the Court’s docket, the Justices famously denigrated the importance (to them) of the Indian cases.¹⁹³ Moreover, the unusual character of the Indian

Cf. LAURENCE BAUM, JUDGES AND THEIR AUDIENCES: A PERSPECTIVE ON JUDICIAL BEHAVIOR 156 (2006) (discussing “issue salience”).

¹⁸⁸ See George & Solimine, supra note __, at 198 (“And our finding that the conservative Rehnquist Court was much more likely to review liberal circuit rulings is consistent with the attitudinal model and with the strategic account of high court agenda-setting.”).

¹⁸⁹ Epstein, Segal & Victor, supra note __, at 395.

¹⁹⁰ Epstein, Segal & Victor, supra note __, at 408 (citing Kevin T. McGuire & Barbara Palmer, Issue Fluidity of the U.S. Supreme Court, 89 AM. POL. SCI. REV. 691 (1995); S. Sidney Ulmer, Issue Fluidity in the U.S. Supreme Court: A Conceptual Analysis, in SUPREME COURT ACTIVISM AND RESTRAINT 322 (Stephen D. Halpern & Charles M. Lamb eds., 1982)).

¹⁹¹ Epstein, Segal & Victor, supra note __, at 430.

¹⁹² E.g., BP America Production v. Burton, 127 S. Ct. 637, 643 (2006); United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 198-99 (2004); Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma v. Leavitt, 543 U.S. 641 (2005); C&L Enters., Inc. v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe of Oklahoma, 532 U.S. 411 (2001); Hagen v. Utah, 510 U.S. 399, 409 (1994); Negonsott v. Samuels, 507 U.S. 99, 102 (1993).

¹⁹³ BOB WOODWARD & SCOTT ARMSTRONG, THE BRETHERN: INSIDE THE SUPREME COURT 57-58 (1979) (reporting that Justice Harlan referred to Tooahnippah v. Hickel, 397 U.S. 598 (1970), as a “peewee” case); id. at 359 (reporting that Justice Brennan referred to United States v. Antoine, 420 U.S. 194 (1977), as a “chickenshit” case); PERRY, supra note __, at 262 (quoting a Supreme Court Justice: “The junior justices always gets the crud. As a junior justice, I had my share of Indian cases.”); Neil M. Richards, The Supreme Court cases – generating a significant amount of confusion amongst those who are not experienced in the field – would seem to compel the Court to stay away.¹⁹⁴ Finally, with Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice O’Connor having been replaced by Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Alito, the personal interest in Indian law of those departed “Westerners” would seem to portend a further decline in Indian law certiorari grants.¹⁹⁵ In relative terms, these cases are rare and affect few people. Only about a quarter of law schools even offer Indian Law as a class.¹⁹⁶ A limited number of law professors know enough about Indian law to be able to discuss the issues in the field with any competence. Every Indian lawyer has an anecdote about a law professor dismissing an Indian law case as being the exception to the rule not worth discussing.¹⁹⁷

Justice’s “Boring” Cases, 4 GREEN BAG 2D 401, 403 (2001) (quoting Justice Brennan’s view of Antoine). But cf. PERRY, supra note __, at 262 (quoting a Supreme Court Justice: “Actually, I think the Indian cases are kind of fascinating. It goes into history and you learn about it, and the way we abused some of the Indians, we, that is the U.S. government....”) (ellipses in original).

¹⁹⁴ The words of one former Supreme Court clerk could tend to imply this theory:

As a former Supreme Court law clerk, allow me to speculate on what would have happened had Justice Souter asked his law clerks for help in finding out about tribal courts. (I do not know if he asked this question.) When I was a clerk, in 1979-80, our best research tools were the excellent research librarians of the Supreme Court library. If asked by my justice, Thurgood Marshall, to find out all I could about tribal courts—a subject about which I knew nothing—I would have turned over the inquiry to one of them. In a few days, I would have received whatever she or he could locate in the Supreme Court library, the Library of Congress, and wherever else materials could be found. There is no way even to guess what those materials would include. Today, a quarter-century after I was a law clerk, one would speculate that the clerks would also take advantage of computer-assisted research. For example, it would seem likely that they would search for “tribal court” using one or more Internet search engines. And it would be beyond the scope of anyone’s imagination what might result from such searches. The task of separating the small amount of wheat from the vast array of chaff would initially fall upon the clerks, who would almost certainly have no expertise to bring to bear.

Philip P. Frickey, Transcending Transcendental Nonsense: Toward a New Realism in Federal Indian Law, 38 CONN. L. REV. 649, 665 (2006)

¹⁹⁵ See PERRY, supra note __, at 261 (“And from a Westerner [Supreme Court Justice]: ‘We now have three Westerners and we are very concerned about Western water rights and Indian cases.’”) (referencing Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Kennedy and O’Connor).

¹⁹⁶ See Gloria Valencia-Weber & Sherri Nicole Thomas, When the State Bar Exam Embraces Indian Law: Teaching Experiences and Observations, 82 N.D. L. REV. 741 (2006).

¹⁹⁷ Cf. Brief of the University of Michigan Asian Pacific American Law Students Association et al. 10, 539 U.S. 306 (2003) (No. 02-241), reprinted at 10 MICH. J. GENDER & L. 7 (2003).

And yet the Court always accepts more Indian cases for review than the field would appear to justify given the Court's limited interest in Indian affairs.¹⁹⁸ Perhaps this is explained by the fact that the Supreme Court's opportunity to make law as a matter of common law exists only in admiralty law and federal Indian law.¹⁹⁹ If the Court's current caseload of about 80 cases holds in the Roberts Court, then if the Court accepts two Indian law cases a year,²⁰⁰ 2.5 percent of its docket will continue to be Indian law-related. In the 2006 Term, the Court decided two cases involving tribal interests.²⁰¹ What attracts the Court to federal Indian law?

B. Broader Constitutional Concerns at Play

While the Court will grant certiorari to resolve circuit splits, those cases do not cover the entirety of the Court's Indian law caseload.²⁰² This Article argues that most Indian law cases reach the Court because there is a constitutional issue embedded in the case that attracts the Court's attention. This Article will refer to these issues as "constitutional concerns." This Article argues that while the Court may decide concomitant federal Indian law issues as part of the overall decision, the constitutional concern is what drives the Court, not the Indian law questions. As a result, because the constitutional concern is far more important to the Court than the Indian law questions, the ¹⁹⁸ See, e.g., Getches, Beyond Indian Law, supra note ___, at 292-93 & n. 109 ("From 1958 to 2000, about 2.4% (121 of 4853 cases) of the Court's total decisions on the merits were Indian cases. In the Rehnquist Court (1986-2000 Terms), about 2.7% (41 of 1510 cases) of the decisions have been in Indian cases. The average number of Indian cases decided has dropped in recent years, but the percentage of Indian cases has remained the same because the overall number of cases decided by the Court has fallen drastically.") (citations omitted).

¹⁹⁹ See LAWRENCE H. TRIBE, AMERICAN CONSTITUTIONAL LAW § 3-23, at 157 (2nd ed. 1988) (noting that the Constitution authorizes the Court to make federal common law where "the usual federalism concerns are not relevant," such as admiralty). Thanks to Joe Singer for raising this point.

²⁰⁰ From 1953 to 2000, the Court decided an average of 1.9 Indian law cases a year. See BAIRD, supra note ___, at 104.

²⁰¹ See BP America Production v. Burton, 127 S. Ct. 637, 643 (2006); Zuni Public School District v. United States Dept. of Education, 127 S. Ct. 1534 (2007).

²⁰² For example, several Indian law cases in recent Terms did not reach the Court because of a split in authority, but for some other reason. See Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005); City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation, 544 U.S. 197 (2005); Inyo County, Cal. v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Indian Community of the Bishop Colony, 538 U.S. 701 (2003); Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353 (2001); Idaho v. United States, 533 U.S. 262 (2001); Atkinson Trading Co., Inc. v. Shirley, 532 U.S. 645 (2001); Rice v. Cayetano, 528 U.S. 495 (2000). Two other cases, Dept. of Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Assn., 532 U.S. 1 (2001), and South Florida Water Management Dist. v. Miccosukee Tribe of Indians, 541 U.S. 95 (2004), while not an Indian law cases per se, involved tribal interests and could be included in this listing.

Court decides the Indian law questions in line with the broader constitutional concern. Only after deciding the constitutional concern does the Court turn to the remainder of the case – the Indian law portion – that also must be decided. It is in these circumstances that the Indian law doctrines, far less salient to the Court and therefore far more malleable, become more confused and even, as Professor Frickey argued, “ruthlessly pragmatic.”²⁰³

All things must start at the beginning, so we first turn to the Marshall Trilogy. Consider Worcester v. Georgia,²⁰⁴ the critical foundational case of federal Indian law described at the beginning of this Article. Justice Breyer has spoken recently about this case.²⁰⁵ Although Justice Breyer is one of few ²⁰³ Frickey, (Native) American Exceptionalism, supra note __, at 460; see also id. at 436 (“ruthless pragmatism”).

²⁰⁴ 31 U.S. 5154 (1832).

²⁰⁵ See Stephen G. Breyer, Reflections of a Junior Justice, 54 DRAKE L. REV. 7, 8-9 (2005); Stephen Breyer, The Legal Profession and Public Service, 57 N.Y.U. ANN. SURV. AM. L. 403, 413-14 (2000). Justice Breyer’s remarks are worth reprinting here:

Consider an important case—one that is often forgotten in courses on constitutional law—from 1832 called Worcester v. Georgia. There was a tribe of Indians, the Cherokees, who, under a treaty with the United States, had land in northern Georgia. Now, this tribe had given up hunting and fishing for better or for worse. They were farmers, they had an alphabet, they even had a constitution. Unfortunately for them they found gold. I say unfortunately because the Georgians then took the land. They simply marched in and took it over. They paid no attention to the treaty. They did pay attention to the gold.

Now as I said this particular tribe of Indians was pretty civilized. So what did they do? They did what any civilized American would do; they hired a lawyer. The lawyer was the best lawyer of his day, Willard Wirt, former Attorney General of the United States, and he said, “We are going to bring a lawsuit and we are going to fight it all the way to the Supreme Court.” In fact, they brought two.

In the first, called Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, they simply sued Georgia, and the Supreme Court eventually found a reason not to hear it. The Court said this is a matter beyond our capability. But then the Georgians passed a law making it a crime to go on the Indian Reservation without the permission of the Georgia legislature. Some missionaries did go on the reservation. A missionary called Worcester was arrested. He was in jail and he brought a lawsuit, in habeas corpus or the equivalent, and said, “I cannot be held here because this land belongs to the Indians, not the Georgians, so Georgia law does not apply.” There was no way for the Supreme Court to avoid that. Here is a person, he is held in prison, he says I am not held correctly under the law because there is no law of Georgia that applies, and he asks the Court to order his release. After a lot of procedural detail, which I will spare you, he got to the Court and the Court decided the case. The Court held that he was right, the land belonged to the Indians. In Justices to have visited Indian Country to become more aware of the conditions on the ground,²⁰⁶ it is doubtful that he incorporated Worcester into his public speeches for that reason. Worcester is not an Indian law case. Before hearing Worcester, the State of Georgia had defied a Supreme Court order staying the execution of a Cherokee man by the State for murder – they executed the man almost as soon as they received the order staying the execution.²⁰⁷ Strong circumstantial evidence supports the notion that the Court must have had Georgia’s defiance in mind when they decided fact, the Court said the Georgians had no basis at all for being there. That is the end of the matter. Release Worcester. Give the land back to the Indians.

The first thing the Georgia legislature did was pass a law that said anyone who comes to Georgia to enforce this ruling of the Supreme Court will be hanged. Andrew Jackson, President of the United States, supposedly said (and he said enough such things that it is probably true): “John Marshall, the Chief Justice, has made his decision. Now let him enforce it.” Nobody did a thing.

But then North Carolina, thinking this rather a good idea, said, “We will not give the United States customs duties that we owe them because we prefer to keep them.” Andrew Jackson woke up to the problem and he ended up saying to the governor of Georgia, “You must release Worcester.” They had a negotiation and Worcester was let out of jail.

But what about the land—the land that the Supreme Court of the United States had said belongs to the Cherokees, not to the Georgians? The President sent troops to Georgia. But did he send them to enforce the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States? No. He sent troops to evict the Indians. They walked along what is historically known as the Trail of Tears, to Oklahoma, where their descendants live to this day.

Breyer, Reflections, supra, at 8-9.

²⁰⁶ See Danelle J. Daughtery, Children are Sacred: Looking Beyond Best Interests of the Child to Establish Effective Tribal-State Cooperative Child Support Advocacy Agreements in South Dakota, 47 S.D. L. REV. 282, 298 n. 133 (2002) (describing Justices Breyer and O’Connor’s visit to several tribal courts); Native American Rights Fund, Case Updates: Two U.S. Supreme Court Justices Visit Tribal Courts, 26 NARF LEG. REV. No. 2 (Summer/Fall 2001), available at <http://www.narf.org/pubs/nlr/nlr26-2.htm> (same). Cf. Sandra Day O’Connor, Lessons from the Third Sovereign: Indian Tribal Courts, 33 TULSA L. J. 1 (1997); Matthew L.M. Fletcher, Same-Sex Marriage, Indian Tribes, and the Constitution, 61 U. MIAMI L. REV. 53, 58 n. 129 (2006) (referencing Bruce Bothelo, Mayor of Juneau, Alaska and former Alaska Attorney General, Address before the Federal Bar Association’s Indian Law Conference, Albuquerque, NM (April 6, 2006), who, as Attorney General for the State of Alaska, hired John G. Roberts to represent Alaska in Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie, 520 U.S. 522 (1998), and brought him to visit an isolated Alaskan Native village prior to the Supreme Court argument).

²⁰⁷ See TIM ALAN GARRISON, THE LEGAL IDEOLOGY OF REMOVAL: THE SOUTHERN JUDICIARY AND THE SOVEREIGNTY OF NATIVE AMERICAN NATIONS 111-29 (2002); see also Georgia v. Tassel, 1 Dud. 229 (Ga. 1830).

Worcester.²⁰⁸ In Worcester, Georgia had convicted four missionaries, and sentenced them to several years of hard labor, for violating a state law that prohibited white men from setting foot in Cherokee Nation territory.²⁰⁹ The law, part of a whole series of laws aimed at destroying the Cherokee Nation as a viable political presence in Georgia,²¹⁰ violated federal treaties between the federal government and the Cherokee Nation.²¹¹ The case had powerful implications for federal Indian law, but those concerns were secondary to the broader constitutional concerns of the supremacy of federal law over conflicting state law and the question of the enforceability of Supreme Court mandates.

Compare Worcester to the previous case in the Marshall trilogy, decided only a year before, Cherokee Nation v. Georgia.²¹² In that case, one Member of the Court argued that Indians were worthless savages and Indian tribes were not viable political entities.²¹³ Another Justice, following Chief Justice Marshall's lead opinion, voted on narrower grounds but agreed that Indians and Indian tribes were weak and dependent.²¹⁴ The Marshall Court was badly fractured over the case, a function of the declining influence of the aging Chief Justice and the increasing hostility toward federal authority from the newer appointees to the Court.²¹⁵ But a year later, because of the powerful and dangerous potential of the State of Georgia's defiance of federal law in Worcester, the Court issued a dramatic reversal of its position on tribal interests.²¹⁶ That reversal did not derive from a newfound appreciation of the plight of the Cherokee Nation at all. Perhaps that reversal happened because the Court began to understand the implications of state defiance of federal law that was beginning to happen in the South. Indian law scholars and advocates ²⁰⁸ See Fletcher, Iron Cold, supra note ___, at 643. Cf. Breyer, Reflections, supra note ___, at 9 (noting that President Jackson, an ardent states' rights advocate, convinced southern states to comply with federal law).

²⁰⁹ See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 537-41.

²¹⁰ See Joseph C. Burke, The Cherokee Cases: A Study in Law, Politics, and Morality, 21 STAN. L. REV. 500, 503 (1969); Vine Deloria, Jr., Conquest Masquerading as Law, in UNLEARNING THE LANGUAGE OF CONQUEST: SCHOLARS EXPOSE ANTI-INDIANISM IN AMERICA 94, 98 (Wahinkpe Topa (Four Arrows), ed. 2006).

²¹¹ See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 560.

²¹² 30 U.S. 1 (1831).

²¹³ See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 25 (Johnson, J.) (referring to the Cherokee Nation as a "petty kraal of Indians").

²¹⁴ Id. at 40 (Baldwin, J., concurring).

²¹⁵ See DAVID P. CURRIE, THE CONSTITUTION IN THE SUPREME COURT: THE FIRST HUNDRED YEARS, 1789-1888, at 195-96 (1985).

²¹⁶ See R. KENT NEWMYER, THE SUPREME COURT UNDER MARSHALL AND TANEY 87 (1968); JEFFREY ROSEN, THE SUPREME COURT: THE PERSONALITIES AND RIVALRIES THAT DEFINED AMERICA 66-67 (2006).

take from Worcester that the Court had affirmed the separate character of tribal sovereignty and the exclusion of state law from Indian Country, but perhaps the bigger question was whether state legislatures could override federal law.²¹⁷

A more acute pattern – with the Court responding to broader constitutional concerns in its Indian cases – corresponds to some extent with the appointment of Justice Rehnquist to the Supreme Court in 1972.²¹⁸

1. Eleventh Amendment State Sovereign Immunity – Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak (1991), Seminole Tribe v. Florida (1996) & Idaho v. Coeur d’Alene Tribe (1997)

Many, if not most, Indian law cases arise out of disputes between Indian tribes and states, with taxation,²¹⁹ regulatory jurisdiction,²²⁰ economic development,²²¹ and the increasing encroachment of state authority within Indian Country²²² being the primary sources of antipathy. However, the Court often never reaches the merits, declaring that it has no jurisdiction because the state sovereign has not waived its sovereign immunity from suit, a result it has ²¹⁷ See Breyer, Reflections, supra note __, at 9; Burke, supra note __, at 530; Gerald N. Magiocco, Preemptive Opinions: The Secret History of Worcester v. Georgia and Dred Scott, 63 U. PITT. L. REV. 487, 550 (2002); Rennard Strickland & William M. Strickland, A Tale of Two Marshalls: Reflections on Indian Law and Policy, the Cherokee Cases, and the Cruel Irony of Supreme Court Victories, 47 OKLA. L. REV. 111, 116-17 (1994).

²¹⁸ JESSE CHOPER, RICHARD H. FALLON, JR., YALE KAMISAR, AND STEVEN H. SHIFFRIN, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW: CASES—COMMENTS—QUESTIONS 1592 (10th ed. 2006).

²¹⁹ E.g., Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005); City of Sherrill, N.Y. v. Oneida Indian Nation of N.Y., 544 U.S. 197 (2004); Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie Tribal Government, 522 U.S. 520 (1998); Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Chickasaw Nation, 515 U.S. 450 (1995); Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Sac & Fox Nation, 508 U.S. 114 (1993); Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe of Okla., 498 U.S. 505 (1991); Cotton Petroleum Corp. v. New Mexico, 490 U.S. 163 (1989); Washington v. Confederated Tribes of Colville Indian Reservation, 447 U.S. 134 (1980).

²²⁰ E.g., City of Sherrill, 544 U.S. 197; Minnesota v. Mille Lacs Band of Chippewa Indians, 526 U.S. 172 (1999); County of Yakima v. Confederate Tribes and Bands of Yakima Indian Nation, 502 U.S. 251 (1992); California v. Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, 480 U.S. 202 (1987); New Mexico v. Mescalero Apache Tribe, 462 U.S. 324 (1983).

²²¹ E.g., Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. 676; County of Yakima, 502 U.S. 251; Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, 480 U.S. 202.

²²² E.g., Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. 676; Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353 (2001); Negonsott v. Samuels, 507 U.S. 99 (1993); County of Yakima, 502 U.S. 251; Cotton Petroleum Corp., 490 U.S. 163; Colville Confederated Tribes, 447 U.S. 134.

reached three times in the last two decades.²²³ The Court has also held in several cases that Indian tribes possess equivalent immunity from suit.²²⁴

In this line of cases, the Court's primary constitutional concern is not tribal sovereignty or Indian rights, but clarity in its Eleventh Amendment jurisprudence.²²⁵ The Rehnquist Court articulated a very robust sovereign immunity for states and placed the foundation of that immunity in the Eleventh Amendment.²²⁶ But neither the text of the Constitution nor the Eleventh Amendment offer express authority for state sovereign immunity, forcing the Court to rely upon the history of the Eleventh Amendment's ratification and even extratextual, preconstitutional notions of state sovereignty principles.²²⁷ The Court's reasoning in these cases may have contributed to its cases holding that Indian tribes also possess a robust sovereign immunity.²²⁸

Each of the three cases discussed here involved critical questions of federal Indian law for which the Supreme Court refused to allow an answer by disclaiming the jurisdiction of the federal judiciary or the power of Congress – or by ignoring the question. In Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak,²²⁹ the ²²³ See Idaho v. Coeur d'Alene Tribe, 521 U.S. 261 (1997); Florida v. Seminole Tribe of Florida, 517 U.S. 44 (1996); Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak and Circle Village, 501 U.S. 775 (1991).

²²⁴ See Kiowa Tribe of Okla. v. Manufacturing Technologies, Inc., 523 U.S. 751, 754-59 (1998); Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe, 498 U.S. at 509-11; Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49, 58-59 (1978).

²²⁵ E.g., Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak, 501 U.S. 775, 777 (1991) (“We are asked once again to mark the boundaries of state sovereign immunity from suit in federal court.”).

²²⁶ See generally MARK TUSHNET, A NEW CONSTITUTIONAL ORDER 51-55 (2004); LaVelle, Sanctioning a Tyranny, supra note __; Thomas W. Merrill, The Making of the Second Rehnquist Court: A Preliminary Analysis, 47 ST. LOUIS U. L. J. 569, 586 (2003).

²²⁷ See Principality of Monaco v. Mississippi, 292 U.S. 313, 322-23 (1934) (“Manifestly, we cannot rest with a mere literal application of the words of § 2 of Article III, or assume that the letter of the Eleventh Amendment exhausts the restrictions upon suits against non-consenting States.”). See generally Larry Alexander & Frederick Schauer, Defending Judicial Supremacy: A Reply, 17 CONST. COMM. 455, 463 (2000) (“The question of how we are to ground the Constitution is preconstitutional and extraconstitutional, and so the question of how we are to understand the Constitution is likewise preconstitutional and extraconstitutional.”). Cf. John F. Manning, The Eleventh Amendment and the Reading of Precise Constitutional Texts, 113 YALE L. J. 1663, 1725-28 (2004) (discussing Principality of Monaco, 292 U.S. 313).

²²⁸ See Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 782 (“We have repeatedly held that Indian tribes would enjoy sovereign immunity against suits by States ... as it would be absurd to suggest that the tribes surrendered immunity in a convention to which they were not even parties.”) (citing Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe of Oklahoma, 498 U.S. 505, 509 (1991)).

²²⁹ 501 U.S. 775 (1991).

State of Alaska's legislature enacted a law providing annual oil revenue-sharing payments to Native village governments.²³⁰ Acting upon the advice of the state attorney general, the legislature then amended the statute to include all unincorporated local governments, reducing the amount of revenue sharing available to each Native village.²³¹ The Native Villages of Noatak and Circle Village brought suit against the State seeking the original amount promised by the legislature.²³² *Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida*²³³ involved the enforcement provisions of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, which authorized Indian tribes to sue States for refusing to negotiate casino-style gaming compacts in good faith.²³⁴ And *Idaho v. Coeur d'Alene Tribe of Idaho*²³⁵ involved the question of whether the banks and submerged lands of Lake Coeur d'Alene were owned by the Coeur d'Alene Tribe or the State of Idaho,²³⁶ requiring an interpretation of an executive order that defined the boundaries of the Tribe's reservation.²³⁷ None of these cases reached a decision on the merits due to the Court's interpretation of the Eleventh Amendment and refusal to apply the doctrine of Ex parte Young.²³⁸

While these cases reached the Supreme Court styled as federal Indian law cases, in actuality none of them were Indian law cases. Perhaps of all the cases discussed in this Article, Seminole Tribe is the most obvious example of a major Indian law-related fact and legal pattern hi-jacked by the Supreme

²³⁰ See id. at 777-778.

²³¹ See id. at 778.

²³² See id.

²³³ 517 U.S. 44 (1996).

²³⁴ See Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 48-52; 25 U.S.C. § 2710(d); KATHRYN R.L. RAND & STEVEN ANDREW LIGHT, INDIAN GAMING LAW AND POLICY 91-94 (2006); G. WILLIAM RICE, TRIBAL GOVERNMENTAL GAMING LAW: CASES AND MATERIALS 311-35 (2006).

²³⁵ 521 U.S. 261 (1997).

²³⁶ See Coeur d'Alene Tribe, 521 U.S. at 264.

²³⁷ See id. at 264-65 (citing Exec. Order of Nov. 8, 1873, reprinted in 1 CHARLES J. KAPPLER, INDIAN AFFAIRS: LAWS AND TREATIES 837 (1904)).

²³⁸ See Coeur d'Alene Tribe, 521 U.S. at 268 ("Were we to abandon our understanding of the Eleventh Amendment as reflecting a broader principle of sovereign immunity, the Tribe's suit ... might proceed."); id. at 281 ("[T]hi suit, we decide, falls on the Eleventh Amendment side of the line [of the Ex parte Young doctrine], and Idaho's sovereign immunity controls.") (citing Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123 (1908)); Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 47 ("We hold that ... the Indian Commerce Clause does not grant Congress [the power to abrogate state Eleventh Amendment sovereign immunity]. ... We further hold that the doctrine of Ex parte Young ... may not be used to enforce [the gaming act] against a state official."); Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 782 (holding that the Eleventh Amendment bars suit against a state by an Indian tribe).

The dispute over Lake Coeur d'Alene did reach resolution (and in the Tribe's favor) after the United States intervened on behalf of the Tribe. See Idaho v. United States, 533 U.S. 262 (2001).

Court's interest in deciding important constitutional concerns. The critical legal question identified by Chief Justice Rehnquist was "whether Congress has acted 'pursuant to a valid exercise of power,'"²³⁹ in its attempt to waive state sovereign immunity under the Eleventh Amendment. In that case, Congress had attempted to exercise its authority under the Indian Commerce Clause.²⁴⁰ Rather than delve into the Court's precedents about the scope of Congressional authority under the Indian Commerce Clause or even the Framers' views about the Clause, Chief Justice Rehnquist's majority opinion offered no discussion whatsoever about Congressional authority under the Clause. Instead, the opinion focused on precedents (and some legal history) relating to the Interstate Commerce Clause, first noting that the Court had recognized Congressional authority to abrogate Eleventh Amendment immunity in only two circumstances – in accordance with Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment and in accordance with the Interstate Commerce Clause.²⁴¹ The opinion glossed over Congressional authority under the Indian Commerce Clause, treating that rich and varied history as all but irrelevant,²⁴² choosing instead to focus on the lone Interstate Commerce Clause case that had recognized Congressional authority to abrogate Eleventh Amendment immunity – *Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co.*²⁴³ Chief Justice Rehnquist's opinion overruled that case, attacking the rationale of Justice Brennan's plurality opinion on numerous grounds.²⁴⁴ At that point, given that the Court denied Congress authority under the Interstate Commerce Clause to abrogate Eleventh Amendment immunity (for that Clause was one conceivable source of Congressional authority to deal with Indian gaming), the logical next question would be whether the Indian Commerce Clause supplied Congress that authority.

Put simply, the Court refused to analyze that question. The Court did conclude (without citation or analysis) that "[i]f anything, the Indian Commerce Clause accomplishes a greater transfer of power from the States to ²³⁹ Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 55 (quoting Green v. Mansour, 474 U.S. 64, 68 (1985)).

²⁴⁰ See id. at 60 (citing Brief for Petitioner 17, Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44 (1996) (No. 94-12)).

²⁴¹ See id. at 59 (citing Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer, 427 U.S. 445, 453 (1976) (Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment), and Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co., 491 U.S. 1, 19 (1989) (plurality opinion) (Interstate Commerce Clause)).

²⁴² See id. at 60-61 (citing Cotton Petroleum Corp. v. New Mexico, 490 U.S. 163, 192 (1989); County of Oneida of N.Y. v. Oneida Indian Nation of N.Y., 470 U.S. 226, 234 (1985); United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 383-84 (1886)).

²⁴³ 491 U.S. 1 (1989).

²⁴⁴ See Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 63-73.

the Federal Government than does the Interstate Commerce Clause.”²⁴⁵ But then the Court refused to disclose just how much or what kind of authority Congress had under the Indian Commerce Clause vis a viz the Eleventh Amendment, asserting, “[T]he plurality opinion in Union Gas allows no principled distinction between the Indian Commerce Clause and the Interstate Commerce Clause.”²⁴⁶ This is a classic non sequitur.

If the Court were serious about focusing on the Indian Commerce Clause instead of overruling an irrelevant precedent, it could have engaged in a serious analysis of the scope of Congressional power under the Indian Commerce Clause. A quick review of the Constitutional Convention provides evidence that the Indian Commerce Clause should be interpreted in a manner different than both the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Clauses – the Framers drafted the Indian Commerce Clause for different reasons than the other two Commerce Clauses²⁴⁷ and, perhaps as a result, added the clause to the Constitution much later in the Convention:²⁴⁸

The provision for regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the several states had been published by the committee of detail two weeks, and definitely approved by the convention two days, before the subject of the Indian trade was introduced on the floor of the convention. It was not until several days later that the latter reported out of committee, still encumbered with some of the qualifications attached to it in the articles; and less than two weeks before the close of the convention that it was finally incorporated with the rest of the commerce clause and approved in the form with which we are familiar. By this time, the larger part of the discussion in the federal convention relative to commercial regulations was ²⁴⁵ Id. at 62; see also id. (“This is clear enough from the fact that the States still exercise some authority over interstate trade but have been divested of virtually all authority over Indian commerce and Indian tribes.”).

²⁴⁶ Id. at 63.

²⁴⁷ See Albert S. Abel, The Commerce Clause in the Constitutional Convention and in Contemporary Comment, 25 MINN. L. REV. 432, 467-68 (1941); see also id. at 467 (citing ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION art. IX(4)) (emphasis added). Professor Abel focused on a notorious proviso reserving some state authority in the Indian Affairs clause of the Articles of Confederation that so infuriated James Madison. See THE FEDERALIST No. 42, at 269 (James Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed. 1961) (referring to the proviso as “absolutely incomprehensible”); 1 RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 316 (Madison) (Max Farrand rev. ed. 1937) (Yale University Press 1966) (“By the federal articles, transactions with the Indians appertain to Congs. Yet in several instances, the States have entered into treaties & wars with them.”).

²⁴⁸ See 2 RECORDS, supra note ___, at 324 (Madison).

over, and in that which did take place later there is no language relating even remotely to Indian trade.²⁴⁹

Professor Abel, after listing the evidence, concluded, “Whatever regulation of commerce might mean in connection with transactions with the Indians, it was so distinct and specialized a subject as to afford no basis for argument as to the meaning of the rest of the clause.”²⁵⁰ Moreover, the Framers intended that Congress’s authority over Indian Commerce extend beyond mere “commerce.” As Professor Robert Stern argued, the Framers intended the Constitution to serve as a “fix” on the problem of the Articles of Confederation, which had allowed the states to muddy the waters of federal Indian affairs policy.²⁵¹ Stern asserted that “the whole spirit of the proceedings indicates that ... the draughtsmen meant commerce to have a broad meaning with relation to the Indians....”²⁵² In fact, Stern acknowledged that “[t]he exigencies of the time may have called for a more complete system of regulating affairs with the Indians than of controlling commerce among the states....”²⁵³ Unfortunately, no party to the matter and not even any of the numerous amici noted this important historical information.

In short, Seminole Tribe’s outcome – and the fate of an important provision in the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act – rested with the Court’s treatment of a case interpreting the Interstate Commerce Clause, not the Indian Commerce Clause.

In a similar vein, the Court in Blatchford and in Coeur d’Alene Tribe focused on two areas related to Eleventh Amendment immunity: (1) the requirement that Congress must express its power to abrogate sovereign immunity “by a clear legislative statement;”²⁵⁴ and (2) the Ex parte Young “exception” to sovereign immunity.²⁵⁵ In Blatchford, the tribal interests had argued that 28 U.S.C. § 1362, recognizing federal subject matter jurisdiction over claims brought by Indian tribes, served as a waiver of Eleventh Amendment immunity.²⁵⁶ In Coeur d’Alene Tribe, the Tribe sued officials of ²⁴⁹ Abel, supra note __, at 467-68 (citing 2 RECORDS, supra note __, at 321 (Journal)) (other footnotes omitted).

²⁵⁰ Abel, supra note __, at 468.

²⁵¹ See Robert L. Stern, That Commerce Which Concerns More States than One, 47 HARV. L. REV. 1335, 1342 (1934).

²⁵² Stern, supra note __, at 1342.

²⁵³ Stern, supra note __, at 1342 n. 27.

²⁵⁴ Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak, 501 U.S. 775, 786 (1991) (citing Dellmuth v. Muth, 491 U.S. 223, 227-28 (1989)).

²⁵⁵ See Idaho v. Coeur d’Alene Tribe of Idaho, 521 U.S. 261, 281-82 (1991); see also Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 76 (1996) (rejecting without analysis the potential application of Ex parte Young).

²⁵⁶ See Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 786.

the State of Idaho under Ex parte Young, asserting that their assertion of state jurisdiction over the disputed territory constituted “an ongoing violation of its property rights in contravention of federal law and [sought] prospective injunctive relief.”²⁵⁷ The Court rejected the Tribe’s application to take advantage of the Ex parte Young exception because to authorize the suit would constitute a de facto quiet title action against the State itself.²⁵⁸ As with Seminole Tribe, these cases offer little or no discussion of foundational federal Indian law principles.²⁵⁹

2. Individual Civil Rights Claims – Morton v. Mancari (1975), Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez (1978), Nevada v. Hicks (2001), & Inyo County v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Community of the Bishop Colony (2003)

Several alleged Indian law cases of the past three decades have involved individual or tribal civil rights claims against the federal or state government or their officials. While the underlying subject matter of these cases had federal Indian law at their core, the Court’s primary concern in these cases appears to be the jurisprudence relating to the liability of federal and state governments to civil rights claims under Section 1983 and the Fifth Amendment. The four cases discussed in the subpart split down the middle, with two major wins for tribal interests (*Morton v. Mancari*²⁶⁰ and *Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez*²⁶¹), one major loss (*Nevada v. Hicks*²⁶²), and one split decision (*Inyo County v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Community of the Bishop Colony*²⁶³), although this discussion will focus on the portion of the Inyo County case that the tribal interests lost.

Consider first Morton v. Mancari. In Mancari, non-Indian employees of the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) challenged a federal regulation awarding preferential treatment to American Indians in BIA employment promotion and demotion decisions.²⁶⁴ The BIA’s employment preference complied with Congressional policy first articulated in the Indian Reorganization Act and extended in various other Congressional ²⁵⁷ Coeur d’Alene Tribe, 521 U.S. at 281.

²⁵⁸ See id. at 282.

²⁵⁹ To be fair, Justice Scalia’s Blatchford opinion does offer a neat and tidy federal Indian law syllogism: “But if the convention could not surrender the tribes’ immunity for the benefit of the States, we do not believe that it surrendered the States’ immunity for the benefit of the tribes.” Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 782 (emphasis in original).

²⁶⁰ 417 U.S. 535 (1974).

²⁶¹ 436 U.S. 49 (1978).

²⁶² 535 U.S. 533 (2001).

²⁶³ 538 U.S. 701 (2003).

²⁶⁴ See Mancari, 417 U.S. at 538.

enactments.²⁶⁵ Most of the Court’s attention focused on the “‘cardinal rule ... that repeals by implication are not favored.’”²⁶⁶ The challengers argued that the 1972 statute banning employment discrimination in most areas of the federal government had served to repeal the Indian preference policy.²⁶⁷ The Court noted that while federal anti-discrimination policy had changed to favor federal employees, Congress had bolstered federal policy in relation to Indian preference in employment within months of the 1972 statute.²⁶⁸ The Court was able to apply two of its canons of statutory construction that a specific statute will control over a general statute²⁶⁹ and that two statutes that are not irreconcilable should be interpreted to preserve both.²⁷⁰ The Court held that the 1972 general prohibition on discrimination in federal employment did not serve to repeal Congress’s continued authorization of Indian preference in employment in certain federal agencies.²⁷¹ This holding of the Mancari Court – a non-federal Indian law issue – continues to be the most important holding of the case, with numerous Supreme Court decisions citing to this opinion.²⁷²

The Mancari Court also held that the Fifth Amendment’s due process clause did not bar the BIA from offering a preference in employment to American Indians.²⁷³ Relying on foundational federal Indian law and policy, the Court noted that the Indian preference in employment was an important element of modern federal Indian policy that would seek to avoid the history

²⁶⁵ See id. at 542-42 (citing 25 U.S.C. §§ 44, 45, 46, 47, 274).

²⁶⁶ Id. at 549-50 (citing Posadas v. National City Bank, 296 U.S. 497, 503 (1936); Wood v. United States, 16 Pet. 342-343, 363 (1842); Universal Interpretive Shuttle Corp. v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Comm’n, 393 U.S. 186, 193 (1968)).

²⁶⁷ See id. at 547 (referencing 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-16(a)). A three-judge panel of the district court had ruled on this basis in favor of the non-Indian challengers. See Mancari v. Morton, 359 F. Supp. 585, 590 (D. N.M. 1973).

²⁶⁸ See id. at 548 (citing 20 U.S.C. §§ 887c(a), (d), § 1119a) (1970 ed., Supp. II)).

²⁶⁹ See id. at 550-51 (citing Bulova Watch Co. v. United States, 365 U.S. 753, 758 (1961); Rodgers v. United States, 185 U.S. 83, 87-89 (1902)).

²⁷⁰ See id. at 551 (citing United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 198 (1939)).

²⁷¹ See id. at 547-51.

²⁷² E.g., Branch v. Smith, 538 U.S. 254, 293 (2003); J.E.M. Ag Supply, Inc v. Pioneer Hi-Bred Intern., Inc., 534 U.S. 124, 141-42 (2001); Astoria Federal Savings and Loan Ass’n v. Solimino, 501 U.S. 104, 109 (1991); Montana v. Blackfeet Tribe of Indians, 471 U.S. 759, 766 (1985); Watt v. Alaska, 451 U.S. 259, 281 (1981); Tennessee Valley Authority v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153, 190-91 (1978); Radzanower v. Touche Ross & Co., 426 U.S. 148, 155 (1976). See also Karen Petroski, Comment, Rethorizing the Presumption Against Implied Repeals, 92 CAL. L. REV. 487, 508 n. 97 (2004) (“According to online citation services, as of this Comment’s publication date, around 800 subsequent opinions cited Morton v. Mancari, most for its holding regarding implied repeal.”).

²⁷³ See Mancari, 417 U.S. at 553-55 (citing Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954)). Importantly, given the importance of the implied repeals portion of the case, the three-judge district court panel never reached this question. See Mancari, 359 F. Supp. at 591.

of “overly paternalistic” Indian policy.²⁷⁴ The Court focused on the plenary power of Congress to effectuate Indian affairs policy,²⁷⁵ as well as the serious problem of the vulnerability of an entire title of the United States Code (Title 25 – Indians) should Congressional legislation affecting Indians be classified as race-based legislation.²⁷⁶ In short, the Court held, Indian preferences were not race-based classifications, but classifications based on the political status of Indians and Indian tribes, negating any equal protection violation under the Fifth Amendment.²⁷⁷ But this holding can be construed as more than a vindication of federal Indian policy favoring Indian people – in fact, as some scholars may have implied,²⁷⁸ the Mancari Court’s equal protection holding should be placed in the greater context of the viability of the Bolling v. Sharpe holding that an equal protection clause should be implied by the Fifth Amendment’s due process clause.²⁷⁹ Consider further that the Burger Court’s prime directive from the Nixon Administration, assuming such a directive was persuasive to the individuals on the Burger Court, was to roll back or at least contain the Warren Court’s expansive reading of implied constitutional rights.²⁸⁰ Perhaps Mancari was a place where some of the Warren Court holdovers could agree with some of the Nixon conservatives that the Bolling holding could be limited because the limit benefited a discrete minority – American Indians. Surely, federal Indian law played an important part in this ²⁷⁴ Id. at 553.

²⁷⁵ See id. at 551-52 (citing the Indian Commerce Clause, CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 3; Board of County Commissioners v. Seber, 318 U.S. 705, 715 (1943)).

²⁷⁶ See id. at 552-53 (“Literally every piece of legislation dealing with Indian tribes and reservations, and certainly all legislation dealing with the BIA, single out for special treatment a constituency of tribal Indians living on or near reservations. If these laws, derived from historical relationships and explicitly designed to help only Indians, were deemed invidious racial discrimination, an entire Title of the United States Code (25 U.S.C.) would be effectively erased and the solemn commitment of the Government toward the Indians would be jeopardized.”) (citing Simmons v. Eagle Seelatsee, 244 F. Supp. 808, 814 n. 13 (E.D. Wash. 1965), aff’d, 384 U.S. 209 (1966)).

²⁷⁷ See id. at 553-54 & n. 24.

²⁷⁸ E.g., Stuart Minor Benjamin, Equal Protection and the Special Relationship: The Case of Native Hawaiians, 106 YALE L. J. 537, 544-45 & n. 33 (1996) (characterizing Mancari as an equal protection case); Philip P. Frickey, Adjudication and Its Discontents: Coherence and Conciliation in Federal Indian Law, 110 HARV. L. REV. 1754, 1762 n. 33 (1997) (questioning whether there is an equal protection element to the Fifth Amendment). Cf. L. Scott Gould, Mixing Bodies and Beliefs: The Predicament of Tribes, 101 COLUM. L. REV. 702, 729 (2001) (arguing that Mancari’s weakness is Adarand Constructors, Inc. v. Pena, 515 U.S. 200 (1997)).

²⁷⁹ See 347 U.S. 497, 498-99 (1954).

²⁸⁰ See JAN CRAWFORD GREENBURG, SUPREME CONFLICT: THE INSIDE STORY OF THE STRUGGLE FOR CONTROL OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT 23-25 (2007).

decision, but it appears likely that much more salient constitutional concerns were at play as well.

Consider next Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez,²⁸¹ perhaps the most powerful Supreme Court precedent of the modern era favoring Indian tribes. In Martinez, a female member of the Santa Clara Pueblo brought suit on behalf of herself and her children under a provision in the Indian Civil Rights Act requiring Indian tribes to guarantee the equal protection of the law.²⁸² The petitioner claimed that the Santa Clara membership ordinance discriminated against her and her children on the basis of sex because it granted membership status to children of male members of the community and female nonmembers while simultaneously denying membership to children of female members of the community and male nonmembers.²⁸³ In rejecting the claim, the Martinez Court affirmed that the Supreme Court would recognize the sovereign immunity of Indian tribes from suit on the same basis as federal and state immunity.²⁸⁴ The Court held that the Indian Civil Rights Act, while a valid act of Congress imposing rigorous duties on tribal government,²⁸⁵ did not operate to waive the immunity of Indian tribes from suit in federal court, noting that Congressional waivers of immunity from suit must be express, not implied.²⁸⁶ While this holding has been critical to Indian tribes and serves as a foundation of modern Indian law, it is important to note for our purposes that the Court borrowed from non-Indian law sovereign immunity cases in its reasoning,²⁸⁷ apparently bringing tribal sovereign immunity cases into a sort of doctrinal consistency with federal and state immunity cases.²⁸⁸ Nevertheless, this aspect of Martinez is a critical Indian law holding.

²⁸¹ 436 U.S. 49 (1978).

²⁸² See Martinez, 436 U.S. at 51 (citing 25 U.S.C. § 1302(8)).

²⁸³ See id.

²⁸⁴ See id. at 58 (citing Turner v. United States, 248 U.S. 354, 358 (1919); United States v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 309 U.S. 506, 512-13 (1940); Puyallup Tribe, Inc. v. Washington Dept. of Game, 433 U.S. 165, 172-73 (1977)).

²⁸⁵ The Court noted and the Pueblo conceded that Congress had plenary power to alter the sovereign powers of Indian tribes, see id. at 58 (citing Talton v. Mayes, 163 U.S. 376, 384 (1896); United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 379-81 (1885); Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U.S. 294, 305-07 (1902)).

²⁸⁶ See id. (citing United States v. Testan, 424 U.S. 392, 399 (1976), quoting in turn, United States v. King, 395 U.S. 1, 4 (1969)).

²⁸⁷ See id. (citing Testan and King).

²⁸⁸ E.g., Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 738 (1999); College Savings Bank v. Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Educ. Expense Board, 527 U.S. 666, 682 (1999); Lane v. Pena, 518 U.S. 187, 192 (1996); United States v. Mitchell, 445 U.S. 535, 538 (1980); Employees of Dept. of Public Health and Welfare, Missouri v. Dept. of Public Health and Welfare, Missouri, 411 U.S. 279, 305 n. 5 (1973) (Brennan, J., dissenting).

Like Mancari, however, Martinez can be read as a case limiting the kind of “judicial activism” linked with the Warren Court (garnering the votes of some Nixon conservatives) that still upheld the rights of a discrete minority (garnering the vote of some Warren Court holdovers). As with Mancari and the doctrine of implied repeals, the proxy for this unusual alignment could have been the Court’s disfavor in recognizing an implied private cause of action in a civil rights statute.²⁸⁹ The Indian Civil Rights Act’s sole cause of action to enforce its provisions was the authorization to petition for a writ of habeas corpus for those convicted of a crime in tribal court.²⁹⁰ The Court noted that there were two critical (and competing) purposes in the Act: “In addition to its objective of strengthening the position of individual tribal members vis-à-vis the tribe, Congress also intended to promote the well-established federal ‘policy of furthering Indian self-government.’”²⁹¹ The Court asserted that Congressional intent to further tribal self-government would be defeated to some extent by opening the federal courts to individuals seeking to enforce the Act,²⁹² holding that Congress’s failure to provide a general cause of action was “deliberate.”²⁹³

There is no doubt that Justice Marshall’s majority opinion offered a substantial defense of tribal sovereignty, imputing, for example, in the Indian Civil Rights Act a Congressional intent to assist in the development of tribal dispute resolution forums, including tribal courts.²⁹⁴ The majority found this intent to exclude most cases from federal court jurisdiction despite contradictory legislative history suggesting that Congress intended for the Act to correct at least five pre-1968 federal court cases denying a civil rights remedy to plaintiffs.²⁹⁵ This evidence reveals a powerful recognition of tribal sovereignty and federal Indian policy favoring tribal governments played an important role in the Court’s reasoning on one hand, but the Court still denied ²⁸⁹ See Martinez, 436 U.S. at 60 (citing Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66 (1975)).

²⁹⁰ 25 U.S.C. § 1303.

²⁹¹ Martinez, 436 U.S. at 62 (quoting Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 551 (1974); citing Fisher v. District Court, 424 U.S. 382, 391 (1976)).

²⁹² See id. at 59-60, 63-64.

²⁹³ See id. at 61 (citing National Railroad Passenger Corp. v. National Assn. of Railroad Passengers, 414 U.S. 453 (1974); Cort, 424 U.S. 382).

²⁹⁴ See id. at 59-60 (citing Fisher, 424 U.S. at 387-88; Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217, 223 (1959)).

²⁹⁵ See Respondents’ Brief at 15, Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49 (1978) (No. 76-682) (citing S. Rep. 90-841, at 9-10 (1967)). The five cases were: Native American Church v. Navajo Tribal Council, 272 F.2d 131 (10th Cir. 1959); Martinez v. Southern Ute Tribe, 249 F.2d 915 (10th Cir. 1957), cert. denied, 356 U.S. 960 (1958); Barta v. Oglala Sioux Tribe, 259 F.2d 553 (8th Cir. 1958), cert. denied, 358 U.S. 932 (1959); Iron Crow v. Oglala Sioux Tribe, 231 F.2d 89 (8th Cir. 1956); Toledo v. Pueblo de Jemez, 119 F. Supp. 429 (D. N.M. 1954).

a federal forum for individuals to vindicate their civil rights. It is possible to conclude that while individual Justices may have voted in favor of the Pueblo out of concern for tribal sovereignty, others may have voted in favor of the Pueblo as a means to deny the creation of yet another implied cause of action in a civil rights case.

The final two cases in this section concern the Court's Section 1983 jurisprudence. Specifically, Nevada v. Hicks concerns the ability of individuals to sue state law enforcement officials in tribal courts,²⁹⁶ while Inyo County v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Community of the Bishop Colony concerns the standing of Indian tribes to bring Section 1983 claims against state officials.²⁹⁷ In Hicks, a tribal member's on-reservation home was the subject of a pair of search warrants issued by Nevada courts (one of which had been domesticized in the reservation tribal court), authorizing state officers to search for evidence that the tribal member had taken a California bighorn sheep in violation of state law.²⁹⁸ The tribal member, Floyd Hicks, brought suit in tribal court, claiming that the state officers (and others, including tribal officers) had violated his civil rights and sought relief under Section 1983.²⁹⁹ The Court rejected the claims on the twin theories that the tribal court did not have jurisdiction over the state officers under principles of federal Indian law and that the tribal court could not have jurisdiction over Section 1983 claims.³⁰⁰ Justice O'Connor, concurring in the result, noted that state sovereign immunity principles should have controlled the outcome, asserting that the majority's discussion of federal Indian law principles were unnecessary and damaging to tribal sovereignty.³⁰¹ In the context of this Article, which alleges that the Court's Members are more likely to vote in accordance with important constitutional concerns and not federal Indian law principles, Hicks is an important anomaly. Justice Scalia's majority opinion begins with an analysis of federal Indian law principles – and, in dramatic fashion, reworks those principles in broad strokes against tribal interests.³⁰² The opinion undermines the principle of federal Indian law that state laws do not have (much) force in Indian Country by expanding for the first time the so-called Montana rule into tribal reservation and trust lands.³⁰³ Justice Scalia justified the unprecedented state law intervention into ²⁹⁶ 533 U.S. 353, 366-69 (2001).

²⁹⁷ 538 U.S. 701, 708-12 (2003).

²⁹⁸ See Hicks, 533 U.S. at 356-57.

²⁹⁹ See id. at 357.

³⁰⁰ See id. at 357-66 (federal Indian law principles); id. at 366-69 (Section 1983).

³⁰¹ See id. at 397-401 (O'Connor, J., concurring in the result).

³⁰² See id. at 360-65.

³⁰³ See id. at 361 (citing UNITED STATES DEPT. OF INTERIOR, FEDERAL INDIAN LAW 510 & n. 1 (1958), citing in turn Utah v. Northern Railroad Co. v. Fisher, 116 U.S. 28 (1885));

Indian Country on the basis that state law enforcement interests simply outweighed the tribe's interest in governing itself.³⁰⁴ The majority's next point, that Congress never intended or authorized tribal courts to assume jurisdiction over Section 1983 claims,³⁰⁵ could have (and should have) disposed of the issue without reference to federal Indian law principles about the jurisdiction of Indian tribes or tribal courts. If a tribal court could not assume jurisdiction over a Section 1983 claim against a state law enforcement officer, then that court would not be able to assert it under federal Indian law, either. The Court could have remanded the federal Indian law question back to the lower courts for a determination of whether some independent federal Indian law principle would justify or authorize the tribal court to take jurisdiction over Section 1983 claims.

The Hicks opinion could have looked more like the short opinion in Inyo County, which held that Indian tribes are not "persons" as defined by Section 1983.³⁰⁶ In Inyo County, the state had raided a tribal business enterprise and confiscated employment records in accordance with a state search warrant, but without tribal authorization.³⁰⁷ The Court reached an unusual conclusion that, although the definitions of "persons" under the Sherman Act and the False Claims Act allows states and foreign nations to sue to vindicate rights under those statutes, Section 1983's definition of "person" does not include Indian tribes.³⁰⁸ The tribe had also relied upon the federal Indian law principle of tribal sovereign immunity and other federal common law principles to avoid the search warrant, issues the Court remanded.³⁰⁹

Of the four cases discussed in this part, Inyo County, perhaps, is the case that implicates federal Indian law principles the least. Each case, however, could have been decided on grounds utterly unrelated to federal Indian law. It is a strong possibility in each case that some Members of each Court (perhaps a significant plurality) signed on to a majority opinion focused Organized Village of Kake v. Egan, 369 U.S. 60, 72 (1962)). Justice Ginsburg's short concurrence disputed the majority's conclusion that the tribal or non-tribal character of the land was irrelevant. See id. at 386 (Ginsburg, J., concurring) (citing Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 U.S. 438, 456 (1997)).

³⁰⁴ See id. at 363-64.

³⁰⁵ See id. at 366-67.

³⁰⁶ See Inyo County, 538 U.S. at 712.

³⁰⁷ See id. at 705.

³⁰⁸ See id. at 711 (citing Pfizer, Inc. v. Government of India, 434 U.S. 308, 309-20 (1978); Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159, 160-63 (1942)). But see id. at 713 (Stevens, J., concurring in the judgment) ("It is demeaning to Native American tribes to deny them the same access to a § 1983 remedy that is available to any other person whose constitutional rights are violated by persons acting under color of state law.").

³⁰⁹ See id. at 712.

on federal Indian law principles because that opinion also vindicated a non-Indian law-related constitutional concern important to them. Consider that each of the four cases includes an important element of what Professor Jed Rubenfeld refers to as the Rehnquist Court’s “anti-anti-discrimination agenda.”³¹⁰ As Professor Rubenfeld puts it, “The anti-anti-discrimination agenda would be especially hostile to claims that a person has been ‘discriminated against’ when he had merely been asked to abide by the same laws as everyone else....”³¹¹ The more recent cases, Hicks and Inyo County, fit this category, with the Court implying that Indians and tribes are not special, that they can and should seek to vindicate whatever rights they might have in some other manner besides civil rights laws. Professor Rubenfeld identified hostility from the Rehnquist Court toward “any other laws extending the concept of discrimination beyond the confines that the Court itself has laid down.”³¹² The claims in Mancari and Martinez appear to fit this category, with the Court refusing to find implied substantive rights or causes of action in either the Fifth Amendment or the Indian Civil Rights.

3. Indian Treaty Rights – Washington v. Washington State Commercial Passenger Fishing Vessel Association (1979)

Indian treaty rights cases form a significant portion of the core of federal Indian law, but the foundational case discussed in this subpart also demonstrate that non-Indian law-related constitutional concerns drove the Court’s decisions. In Washington v. Washington Commercial Passenger Fishing Vessel Association,³¹³ the Court affirmed the foundation of the famous “Boldt decision” recognizing Indian treaty fishing rights in the Puget Sound area.³¹⁴ But the case included a major question relating to the granting of full faith and credit of federal court orders in state courts,³¹⁵ a question ³¹⁰ See RUBENFELD, supra note ___, at 176-79.

³¹¹ Id. at 176.

³¹² Id.

³¹³ 443 U.S. 658 (1979) (“Fishing Vessel”). For commentary on the case, please see RUSSEL L. BARSH, THE WASHINGTON FISHING RIGHTS CONTROVERSY: AN ECONOMIC CRITIQUE 77-103 (1979); FAY G. COHEN, TREATIES ON TRIAL: THE CONTINUING CONTROVERSY OVER NORTHWEST INDIAN FISHING RIGHTS (1986); CHARLES F. WILKINSON, MESSAGES FROM FRANK’S LANDING: A STORY OF SALMON, TREATIES, AND THE INDIAN WAY (2000).

³¹⁴ See Fishing Vessel, 443 U.S. at __.

³¹⁵ See generally Fishing Vessel, 443 U.S. at 669 n. 14 (“The impact of illegal regulation ... and of illegal exclusionary tactics by non-Indians ... in large measure accounts for the decline of the Indian fisheries during this century and renders that decline irrelevant to a determination of the fishing rights the Indians assumed they were securing by initialing the treaties in the middle of the last century.”) (citing Tulee v. Washington, 315 U.S. 681 (1942); United States v. Winans, 198 U.S. 371 (1905)); id. at 672 n. 19 (“[T]he reason for our recent about the supremacy of federal law.³¹⁶ This case can be seen as a rehash of Worcester. In this case, the culmination of dozens of lawsuits and federal and state court decisions, the Court was confronted with the fact that a state supreme court had interpreted a treaty in ways that conflicted with federal court interpretations. Moreover, lower state courts and state officials had a long history of violating federal court orders throughout the larger dispute over treaty fishing rights. Of course, this problem implicated the Court's supervisory responsibility.³¹⁷ grant of certiorari on the question remains because the state courts are—and, at least since the State Supreme Court's decision in Department of Game v. Puyallup Tribe, 86 Wash.2d 664, 548 P.2d 1058 (1976), have been—on record as interpreting the treaties involved differently from the federal courts.”); id. at 673 (“When Fisheries was ordered by the state courts to abandon its attempt to promulgate and enforce regulations in compliance with the federal court's decree—and when the Game Department simply refused to comply—the District Court entered a series of orders enabling it, with the aid of the United States Attorney for the Western District of Washington and various federal law enforcement agencies, directly to supervise those aspects of the State's fisheries necessary to the preservation of treaty fishing rights.”) (citing United States v. Washington, 459 F. Supp. 1020 (W.D. Wash.), aff'd, 573 F.2d 1123 (9th Cir. 1978)); id. at 674 (“Because of the widespread defiance of the District Court's orders, this litigation has assumed unusual significance. We granted certiorari in the state and federal cases to interpret this important treaty provision and thereby to resolve the conflict between the state and federal courts regarding what, if any, right the Indians have to a share of the fish, to address the implications of international regulation of the fisheries in the area, and to remove any doubts about the federal court's power to enforce its orders.”) (citing Washington v. United States, 439 U.S. 909 (1978)).

³¹⁶ CONST. art. IV, § 1 (requiring state courts to give full faith and credit to each other's decisions); CONST. art. VI, ¶ 2 (Supremacy Clause); 28 U.S.C. § 1738 (requiring state courts to give full faith and credit to federal courts and vice versa).

³¹⁷ Another case, United States v. Dion, 476 U.S. 734 (1986), is a question about Congressional power to abrogate treaties with later-enacted legislation, see Dion, 476 U.S. at 738 (“It is long settled that ‘the provisions of an act of Congress, passed in the exercise of its constitutional authority, ... if clear and explicit, must be upheld by the courts, even in contravention of express stipulations in an earlier treaty’ with a foreign power.”) (quoting Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U.S. 698, 720 (1893), and citing Goldwater v. Carter, 444 U.S. 696 (1979)), not to mention the serious national worry that Bald Eagles and other kinds of eagles were near extinction at the time, see Roberto Iraola, The Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act, 68 ALB. L. REV. 973, 974 n. 9 (2005) (citing Bald Eagle Protection Act, ch. 278, 54 Stat. 250 (1940)).

One final case, Minnesota v. Mille Lacs Band of Chippewa Indians, 526 U.S. 172 (1999), is a similar question about Executive power to abrogate treaties. See Mille Lacs, 526 U.S. at 188-89 (“‘The President's power, if any, to issue the order must stem either from an act of Congress or from the Constitution itself.’”) (quoting Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 585 (1952)); id. at 196 (citing El Al Israel Airlines, Ltd. v. Tsui Yuan Tseng, 525 U.S. 155, 167 (1999), a case describing means of interpreting foreign treaties). For background and commentary on this important case, please see JAMES M. MCCLURKEN ET AL., FISH IN THE GREAT LAKES, WILD RICE AND GAME IN ABUNDANCE: TESTIMONY ON BEHALF OF MILLE LACS OJIBWE HUNTING AND FISHING RIGHTS (2000); Kristen A. Carpenter,

4. Religious Freedom – Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association (1988)

In the two major Indian religious freedom cases in the modern era, tribal interests went down in humiliating defeat. In the first, Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association,³¹⁸ the tribal interests attempted to prevent the United States Forest Service from constructing a road through an area in northern California sacred to the Yurok, Karuk, Tolowa Indians.³¹⁹ Conceding that the construction of the road would be “devastating” to the religion³²⁰ (but doubting that it would “doom” the religion³²¹), Justice O’Connor’s majority opinion focused on two points. First, the land at issue was owned by the federal government and the Court disfavored outsider attempts to control federal land projects.³²² Second, the Lyng majority was concerned that the Court would be forced to choose one religion over

A Property Rights Approach to Sacred Sites Cases: Asserting a Place for Indians as Nonowners, 52 UCLA L. REV. 1061, 1102-03 (2005); Robert Laurence, Antipodean Reflections on American Indian Law, 20 ARIZ. J. INT’L & COMP. L. 533, 542-43 (2003); Harvard Law Review Association, State Sovereignty—Compatibility with Indian Treaty Rights, 113 HARV. L. REV. 389 (1999).

The constitutional concern in these cases has little to do with tribal interests. The Court’s interest was the extent of Congressional and Executive authority to abrogate treaties. The fact that they were Indian treaties is all but irrelevant.

³¹⁸ 485 U.S. 439 (1988).

³¹⁹ See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 442-45.

³²⁰ Lyng, 485 U.S. at 451; see also id. (“The Government does not dispute, and we have no reason to doubt, that the logging and road-building projects at issue in this case could have devastating effects on traditional Indian religious practices. Those practices are intimately and inextricably bound up with the unique features of the Chimney Rock area, which is known to the Indians as the ‘high country.’ Individual practitioners use this area for personal spiritual development; some of their activities are believed to be critically important in advancing the welfare of the Tribe, and indeed, of mankind itself. The Indians use this area, as they have used it for a very long time, to conduct a wide variety of specific rituals that aim to accomplish their religious goals. According to their beliefs, the rituals would not be efficacious if conducted at other sites than the ones traditionally used, and too much disturbance of the area’s natural state would clearly render any meaningful continuation of traditional practices impossible.”).

³²¹ Lyng, 485 U.S. at 451 (“To be sure, the Indians themselves were far from unanimous in opposing the G-O road, ... and it seems less than certain that construction of the road will be so disruptive that it will doom their religion. Nevertheless, we can assume that the threat to the efficacy of at least some religious practices is extremely grave.”).

³²² See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 453 (“Whatever rights the Indians may have to the use of the area, however, those rights do not divest the Government of its right to use what it, after all, its land.”) (emphasis in original); id. at 452 (“The First Amendment must apply to all citizens alike, and it can give to none of them a veto over public programs.”).

another,³²³ second-guess the salience of religious belief,³²⁴ or interpret the religious tenets of unfamiliar religions.³²⁵ The Court noted that its validation of the tribal claim would result in a situation where “government ... were required to satisfy every citizen’s religious needs and desires.”³²⁶ But foundational federal Indian law principles would have required the Court to address the possibility that in the case of the California Indians, the United States may have agreed via treaty that these specific Indian religious practices or these Indian lands must be protected from federal interference. That might have required the Court to address the sticky question of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hildalgo³²⁷ and the subsequent unratified California Indian treaties of the 1850s.³²⁸ This, course, the Court did not do. The difficult hypothetical questions concerning Justice O’Connor would not have arisen in this context, nor would this case have constituted a precedent for any other kind of religious freedom cases.³²⁹ ³²³ See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 457 (“We would accordingly be required to weigh the value of every religious belief and practice that is said to be threatened by any government program.”).

³²⁴ See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 449 (“This Court cannot determine the truth of the underlying beliefs that led to the religious objections ... and accordingly cannot weigh the adverse effects ... on the Indian respondents.”) (citing Hobbie v. Unemployment Appeals Commission of Florida, 480 U.S. 136, 144 n. 9 (1987); Bowen v. Roy, 476 U.S. 693 (1986)).

³²⁵ See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 457-58 (“In other words, the dissent’s approach would require us to rule that same religious adherents misunderstand their own religious beliefs.”).

³²⁶ Lyng, 485 U.S. at 452; see also id. (“A broad range of government activities - from social welfare programs to foreign aid to conservation projects - will always be considered essential to the spiritual well-being of some citizens, often on the basis of sincerely held religious beliefs. Others will find the very same activities deeply offensive, and perhaps incompatible with their own search for spiritual fulfillment and with the tenets of their religion.”).

³²⁷ See generally Frederico M. Cheever, A New Approach to Spanish and Mexican Land Grants and the Public Trust Doctrine: Defining the Property Interest Protected by the Treaty of Guadalupe-Hildago, 33 UCLA L. REV. 1364 (1986); Christine A. Klein, Treaties of Conquest: Property Rights, Indian Treaties, and the Treaty of Guadalupe Hildago, 26 N.M. L. REV. 201 (1996); Guadalupe T. Luna, Legal Realism and the Treaty of Guadalupe Hildago: A Fractionalized Legal Template, 2005 WIS. L. REV. 519.

³²⁸ See Steve Talbot, California Indians, Genocide of, in 1 ENCYCLOPEDIA OF AMERICAN INDIAN HISTORY 230-31 (Bruce E. Johansen & Barry M. Pritzker eds. 2007) (discussing the 18 “lost treaties”); ROBERT F. HEIZER, EIGHTEEN UNRATIFIED TREATIES OF 1851-1852 BETWEEN THE CALIFORNIA INDIANS AND THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT (1972).

³²⁹ Another Indian religious freedom case, Employment Division v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872 (1990), appears to be a classic case of tribal interests being hijacked by the jurisprudential agenda of the Court and by the social policy of the federal government. In Smith, two employees (who were members of the Native American Church) of a private drug rehabilitation organization were fired for ingesting peyote as a sacrament (a bad fact pattern if there ever was one). See Smith, 494 U.S. at 874. After their termination, they sought unemployment benefits but were denied because state law categorized the use and possession of peyote as a crime. See id. at 876 (citing Employment Division v. Smith, 763 P.2d 146, 148

5. Reparations – City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation (2005)

In City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation,³³⁰ the Supreme Court held that the “settled expectations” of non-Indian property owners and state and local governments justified the application of equitable defenses such as laches, impossibility, and acquiescence, to Indian claims to sovereignty.³³¹ The Second Circuit then applied the broadest reading of the reasoning of the Sherrill Court to dismiss Indian land claims on appeal in which the Cayuga Indian Nation had won at the trial court level over $200 million in damages and interest against the State of New York and several of its political subdivisions.³³² In other words, any older claim to land, treaty rights, or sovereignty – no matter its merit – could be subject to equitable defenses favoring non-Indian property or governmental interests.

What is very interesting about City of Sherrill is the breadth of its reasoning. Given the existence and potential of massive claims for reparations winding their way through federal courts,³³³ Justice Ginsburg’s reasoning in City of Sherrill could apply with equal force to non-Indian reparations claims in which any “settled” property interests are at risk. The opinion serves, in some ways, as the legal implementation of philosophical objections to ancient claims.³³⁴ City of Sherrill may be the first shot off the bow in a larger

(Or. 1988)). Justice Scalia’s majority opinion extended the reach of Lyng – over Justice O’Connor’s objection, see id. at 891 (O’Connor, J., concurring in the judgment) – by eviscerating a First Amendment balancing test that required the Court to apply a form of strict scrutiny to governmental programs that substantially burdened a religious practice. See id. at 882-889 (citing Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398 (1963)). Congress reacted to the Smith decision by enacting the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. See 107 Stat. 1488, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb et seq.; City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 512 (1997). Moreover, the events in the case arose at the same time that the Nation was engaged in the infamous “War on Drugs.” See Gun South, Inc. v. Brady, 711 F. Supp. 1054, 1056-57 (N.D. Ala. 1989). Given this confluence of non-Indian law related factors, the petitioners in Smith had no chance.

³³⁰ 544 U.S. 197 (2005).

³³¹ See City of Sherrill, 544 U.S. 197. See generally Singer, Nine-Tenths of the Law, supra note ____.

³³² See Cayuga Indian Nation of N.Y. v. Pataki, 413 F.3d 266, 274 (2nd Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 126 S. Ct. 2021 & 2022 (2006).

³³³ See generally Burt Neuborne, Holocaust Reparations Litigation: Lessons for the Slavery Reparations Movement, 58 N.Y.U. ANN. SURV. AM. L. 615 (2003).

³³⁴ E.g., Richard A. Eptstein, Property Rights Claims of Indigenous Populations: The View from the Common Law, 31 U. TOLEDO L. REV. 1 (1999); Samuel T. Morison, Prescriptive Justice and the Weight of History, 38 CREIGHTON L. REV. 1153 (2005); Jeremy Waldron, Redressing Historical Injustice, 52 U. TORONTO L. J. 135 (2002); Jeremy Waldron, Superceding Historical Injustice, 103 ETHICS 4 (1992).

reparations debate – and could be a signal that massive reparations are not forthcoming from this Supreme Court.

6. Remaining Post-1986 Cases

This pattern repeats in numerous other cases involving tribal interests after 1986. Fifth Amendment takings drove the Court's decisions in Hodel v. Irving and Babbitt v. Youpee that invalidated attempts by Congress to remedy the serious problem of fractionating heirships on Indian lands.³³⁵ The Court held that damage to private property rights from the federal government's exercise of its navigational servitude over riverbeds is not compensable under the Fifth Amendment in United States v. Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma.³³⁶ The contours of federal agency discretion drove the Court's decisions in Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma v. Leavitt,³³⁷ United States v. Navajo Nation,³³⁸ and Lincoln v. Vigil.³³⁹ State compliance with the Fifteenth Amendment drove the Court's decision in Rice v. Cayetano.³⁴⁰ The policy behind the Freedom of Information Act drove Department of Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Association.³⁴¹ Rejections of the intergovernmental tax immunity doctrine and the argument that state taxes must be reasonably related to state services to taxpayers drove Cotton Petroleum v. New Mexico.³⁴² The case where the Court held that tribes cannot have criminal jurisdiction over nonmembers – Duro v. Reina – focused on Congressional authority to subject American citizens to criminal prosecution in jurisdictions that do not provide American-style criminal procedure protections.³⁴³ Montana v. Crow Tribe of Indians relied on the principle that nontaxpayers cannot sue to recover the taxes paid by another.³⁴⁴ Amoco Production Co. v. Southern Ute Indian Tribe held that in federal land patents to private landowners reserving federal rights to coal under the surface, the patents granted rights to coal bed methane gas to the patentees and was not ³³⁵ See Babbitt v. Youpee, 519 U.S. 234, 243-45 (1998); Hodel v. Irving, 481 U.S. 704, 715-18 (1987).

³³⁶ 480 U.S. 700, 703-04 (1987).

³³⁷ 543 U.S. 631, 636-47 (2005).

³³⁸ 537 U.S. 532, 506-14 (2003).

³³⁹ 508 U.S. 182, 190-99 (1993).

³⁴⁰ 528 U.S. 495, 511-17 (2000).

³⁴¹ 532 U.S. 1, 8-16 (2001).

³⁴² 490 U.S. 163, 174-76 (1989) (citing James v. Dravo Contracting Co., 302 U.S. 134 (1937) (intergovernmental tax immunity); id. at 189-91 (state services)).

³⁴³ 490 U.S. 676, 693-94 (1990) (citing Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1 (1957)).

³⁴⁴ 523 U.S. 696, 713 (1998) (citing Furman Univ. v. Livingston, 136 S.E.2d 254, 256 (S.C. 1964); Krauss Co. v. Develle, 110 So.2d 104, 106 (La. 1959); Kesbec, Inc. v. McGoldrick, 16 N.E.2d 288, 290 (N.Y. 1938)).

reserved by federal law.³⁴⁵ Chickasaw Nation v. United States was a simple statutory interpretation case involving the application of canons of tax immunity interpretations.³⁴⁶ South Florida Water Management District v. Seminole Tribe of Florida held that the Clean Water Act reaches to point sources that do not generate pollution.³⁴⁷ Note that all of the above cases are losses for tribal interests.

There are several Indian law cases decided by the Court where it appears that the outcome was decided through the application of Indian law principles, but these cases are few and far between after the early 1990s and almost all of them are tax cases. Thirteen of these cases were losses for tribal interests,³⁴⁸ while five were wins.³⁴⁹

C. Conclusions from the Survey

The previous survey may lead to some conclusions that might surprise observers of federal Indian law. As would be true with any theory, it is impossible to prove with any certainty what motivates the Justices in their voting preferences, but in several modern era cases that commentators label “federal Indian law” cases, there are significant alternative holdings or reasons unrelated to federal Indian law principles that could be used to justify the decision. Moreover, as the years advanced, it could be argued that the Court decided the cases less and less on federal Indian law principles. Three of the six Indian law decisions made in the 2003 to 2005 Terms have no Indian law issues whatsoever.³⁵⁰ In the last ten years, only one case arguably ³⁴⁵ 526 U.S. 865, 874-80 (1999).

³⁴⁶ 534 U.S. 84, __ (2001).

³⁴⁷ 541 U.S. 95, 104-05 (2004) (construing 33 U.S.C. § 1362(12)).

³⁴⁸ See Wagon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005); Atkinson Trading Co., Inc. v. Shirley, 532 U.S. 645 (2001); C & L Enterprises v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe of Oklahoma, 532 U.S. 411 (2001); Arizona Department of Revenue v. Blaze Construction Co., Inc., 526 U.S. 32 (1999); Cass County, Minnesota v. Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians, 524 U.S. 103 (1998); Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie, 522 U.S. 520 (1998); South Dakota v. Yankton Sioux Tribe, 522 U.S. 329 (1998); Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 U.S. 438 (1997); Department of Taxation and Finance of New York v. Milhelm Attea & Bros, Inc., 512 U.S. 61 (1994); Hagen v. Utah, 510 U.S. 399 (1993); South Dakota v. Bourland, 508 U.S. 679 (1993); Negonsott v. Samuels, 507 U.S. 99 (1993); County of Yakima v. Confederated Tribes and Bands of Yakima Indian Nation, 502 U.S. 251 (1992).

³⁴⁹ See United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193 (2004); United States v. White Mountain Apache Tribe 537 U.S. 465 (2003); Idaho v. United States, 533 U.S. 262 (2001); Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Chickasaw Nation, 515 U.S. 450 (1995); Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Sac & Fox Nation, 508 U.S. 114 (1993).

³⁵⁰ See Gonzales v. O Centro Espirita Beneficiente Uniao Do Vegetal, 126 S. Ct. 1211 (2006); Cherokee Nation of Okla. v. Leavitt, 543 U.S. 631 (2005); South Fla. Water Mgmt. Dist. v. Seminole Tribe of Fla., 541 U.S. 95 (2004).

had no non-Indian law components to it³⁵¹ – and every other case (again, arguably) had a non-Indian law case with an issue that might have been dispositive of the entire case. Take, for example, United States v. Navajo Nation,³⁵² a case vilified by commentators because the Court ruled that an apparent arbitrary decision by the Secretary of Interior (in favor of a personal friend’s client) was not precluded by federal statute.³⁵³ The Court’s decision rested in part – and perhaps could have been the crux of the entire decision – on a preference for deferring to administrative agencies.³⁵⁴ Or take Nevada v. Hicks,³⁵⁵ a case ostensibly about the civil jurisdiction of tribal courts,³⁵⁶ could just as easily be characterized as a decision vindicating the sovereign immunity of states and their officers in foreign courts.³⁵⁷ Or Inyo County v. Bishop Paiute Community,³⁵⁸ a case about whether tribal sovereign immunity can prevent a state government officer from raiding a tribal casino facility to enforce a state civil law, turned on whether the tribe or any sovereign entity was a “person” under the meaning of federal civil rights statutes.³⁵⁹ *Minnesota v. Mille Lacs Band*³⁶⁰ is a strong example of an Indian law dispute posing an important constitutional question for the Court to decide. While the origins of the dispute involved the treaty rights of the Mille Lacs Band,³⁶¹ the important constitutional concern that may have been more salient for the individual Justices voting preferences was the question of whether the ³⁵¹ See Cass County, Minnesota v. Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians, 524 U.S. 103 (1998).

³⁵² 537 U.S. 488 (2003).

³⁵³ E.g., Editorial, Supreme Court Deals a Win and a Lesson, INDIAN COUNTRY TODAY, Mar. 14, 2003, available at <http://www.indiancountry.com/content.cfm?id=1047662515> (last visited January 23, 2007); For a more nuanced view, see Raymond Cross, The Federal Trust Duty in an Age of Indian Self-Determination: An Epitaph for a Dying Doctrine?, 39 TULSA L. REV. 369, 390-97 (2003); Raymond Cross, Reconsidering the Original Founding of Indian and Non-Indian America: Why a Second American Founding Based on Principles of Deep Diversity is Needed, 25 PUB. LAND & RESOURCES L. REV. 61, 80-83 (2004).

³⁵⁴ See Navajo Nation, 537 U.S. at 513-14 (citing Michigan Citizens for Independent Press v. Thornburg, 868 F.2d 1285 (D.C. Cir.), aff’d by an equally divided Court, 493 U.S. 38 (1989) (per curiam)).

³⁵⁵ 533 U.S. 353 (2001).

³⁵⁶ See LaVelle, Outtakes, supra note ___, at 759-76; Kimberly Radermacher, Case Comment, Constitutional Law—Indian Law: The Ongoing Divestiture by the Supreme Court of Tribal Jurisdiction over Nonmembers, On and Off the Reservation—Nevada v. Hicks, 78 N.D.L. REV. 125 (2002).

³⁵⁷ See Hicks, 533 U.S. at 364-65 (citing Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 638 (1987); Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U.S. 257, 263 (1879)).

³⁵⁸ 538 U.S. 701 (2003).

³⁵⁹ See id. at 709-12.

³⁶⁰ 526 U.S. 172 (1999).

³⁶¹ See id. at 196-200.

President can abrogate a treaty without express permission of Congress.³⁶² One could speculate that at least some or all of the five Justices that voted for the Mille Lacs Band voted because they believed the President did not have authority to unilaterally abrogate treaties – while not having a salient opinion on the treaty interpretation questions that followed.

Much more empirical work is possible here, for example, to determine whether the Court's certiorari decisions are influenced by a non-Indian law-related constitutional concern; whether lower federal and state courts follow this pattern; whether the apparent pattern recurs further back in Supreme Court history; and, in general, to provide further evidence on the claims made in this Article.

The purpose of the survey is to provide a means for discussing the possibility that the Rehnquist Court's decisions where tribal interests are at stake are not federal Indian law decisions. This possibility is not so much as raised in the scholarship analyzing these cases, with the glaring exceptions of Dean David Getches' and Professor Phil Frickey's work.³⁶³ It is a distinct possibility that the Indian law principles discussed, analyzed, and applied by the Court are no more than window dressing to the broader constitutional concerns attracting the Court's attention. If this is plausible, then the way Indian law scholars and practitioners read and analyze the Court's recent federal Indian law decisions must be reexamined.

IV. Identifying the Constitutional and Pragmatic Concerns in the Indian Cases

Lawrence Lessig's compelling article, "How I Lost the Big One," discussing his advocacy before the Supreme Court in Eldred v. Ashcroft,³⁶⁴ should offer important tips to tribal advocates.³⁶⁵ Lessig lost the case but provided powerful insights into Supreme Court litigation:

Our case had been supported from the very beginning by an extraordinary lawyer, Geoffrey Stewart, and by the law firm he had moved to, Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue. There were three ³⁶² See id. at 188-95 (citing Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 585 (1952)).

³⁶³ See generally Frickey, (Native) American Exceptionalism, supra note ___ (arguing that the Supreme Court is in the process of re-molding the foundational principles of federal Indian law to fit within general public law); Getches, Beyond Indian Law, supra note ___ (arguing that states' rights, mainstream values, and colorblind justice drive the Court's Indian law decisions). Cf. RUBENFELD, supra note ___, at 158-83 (asserting than an "anti-anti-discrimination" principle drives the Court's civil rights docket).

³⁶⁴ 537 U.S. 186 (2003).

³⁶⁵ See Lessig, supra note ___.

key lawyers on the case from Jones Day. Stewart was the first; then, Dan Bromberg and Don Ayer became quite involved. Bromberg and Ayer had a common view about how this case would be won: We would only win, they repeatedly told me, if we could make the issue seem “important” to the Supreme Court. It had to seem as if dramatic harm were being done to free speech and free culture; otherwise, the justices would never vote against “the most powerful media companies in the world.”³⁶⁶

Lessig’s mention of an “important” issue planted the seed, in many respects, for this Article. Scholars had long scoured Supreme Court opinions, papers of the Justices, and anecdotal evidence from Justices, clerks, and litigants to discover the “important” issues that, first, make cases certworthy, and second, compel a member of the Court to vote in a certain way. Lessig’s story is a reminder that the “important” issue sometimes is not obvious unless we are willing to look in a different direction at the same questions. Indian law advocates need to do the same thing.

Further consider Professor Lessig’s review of the opinion in his case: I first scoured the majority opinion, written by Ginsburg, looking for how the court would distinguish the principle in this case from the principle in [United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995)]. The reasoning was nowhere to be found. The case was not even cited. The core argument of our case did not even appear in the court’s opinion. I couldn’t quite believe what I was reading. I had said that there was no way this court could reconcile limited powers with the commerce clause and unlimited powers with the progress clause. It had never even occurred to me that they could reconcile the two by not addressing the argument at all.³⁶⁷

Lessig’s review of his own case sounds terrifyingly familiar to tribal advocates reading their own cases. Critical arguments made by tribal interests that may have had powerful sway with lower court judges sometimes go nowhere with Supreme Court Justices – or are simply ignored.

Tribal advocates are starting to learn the game, but sometimes there’s just not enough to work with. For example, early in the 2005 Term, the Supreme Court heard arguments in Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation,³⁶⁸ a dispute between the Nation and the State of Kansas over whether Kansas’s motor fuel tax on retailers – which was paid by the Nation when the ³⁶⁶ Id. at 59.

³⁶⁷ Id. at 62.

³⁶⁸ 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005).

retailers passed the tax through to their customers – was preempted by federal law and tribal sovereignty.³⁶⁹ Justice Souter asked the first question in both the state and tribal arguments – effectively contextualizing the case against the tribal interests in the first moments of the argument – of whether the tribe was acting as a government or as a business.³⁷⁰ In fact, the Nation made a powerful argument that every dollar of a tax it intended to collect once the state tax was lifted would go toward highway repairs and maintenance – a governmental function.³⁷¹ The Court all but ignored that argument, refusing to apply the preemption test at all.³⁷² In essence, the Court refused to even apply federal Indian law principles on the theory that the state levied the tax outside of Indian Country.³⁷³ Indian law didn't even apply in Wagnon.

What concern did the Court have when it decided Wagnon? One possibility was that the Court was worried that the states and the federal government might adapt the Nation's theory for their own purposes. In critiquing the Nation's arguments, the Court appeared to imply that these federal Indian law principles might translate to state and federal tax ³⁶⁹ Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. at 680-81.

³⁷⁰ See Oral argument at 4, Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005) (No. 04-631) (Justice Souter: “My question is, Do we know, from the record, whether the tax that is assessed on the distributor is, in fact, passed through to the tribe so that, in economic effect, the tribe is collecting, via pass-through, the State tax and imposing its own tax and still selling at market prices?”); id. at 25 (Justice Souter: “The what’s [the Nation’s] gripe? It wants a bigger profit? ... [I]f the tribe is collecting its tax, and it does not have a claim to greater taxation or greater profit, then how is its sovereign right as a taxing authority being interfered with?”).

³⁷¹ See Brief for Respondent 2, Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005) (No. 04-631) (“The state tax thus interferes directly with a core attribute of tribal sovereignty – the Tribe’s power to impose a fuel tax to finance the construction and maintenance of reservation roads and bridges. The State’s studied ignorance of the Tribe’s sovereign interest in taxation to support its infrastructure is ironic at best, as the power to tax is the very attribute of its own sovereignty that the State purports to vindicate. Despite the State’s contentions, this case is not about economic advantage, but about how to accommodate the competing interests of two legitimate sovereigns. The State’s solution is to deny the Tribe’s interest in its entirety.”); Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. at 698 (Ginsburg, J., dissenting) (“In sum, the Nation operates the Nation Station in order to provide a service for patrons at its casino without, in any way, seeking to attract bargain hunters on the lookout for cheap gas. Kansas’ collection of its tax on fuel destined for the Nation Station will effectively nullify the Nation’s tax, which funds critical reservation road-building programs, endeavors not aided by state funds. I resist that unbalanced judgment.”).

³⁷² See Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. at 688 (refusing to apply the preemption test); id. at 689 (refusing to consider to roads argument).

³⁷³ See Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. at 688 (citing Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Jones, 411 U.S. 145 (1973)).

questions.³⁷⁴ Perhaps the Court was worried that states would demand a refund for money they paid in accordance with government contracts to construction contractors based out of state where that money could be traced to another state's taxation (a circumstance that occurs with regularity in tribal construction projects³⁷⁵). Regardless, what is clear from Wagnon is that there was no important constitutional concern supporting the tribal interests, nor were there secondary pragmatic reasons significant enough to vote for the Prairie Band.

Tribal advocates are at a serious disadvantage in constitutional litigation before the Supreme Court. As Justice Thomas pointed out, there is nothing in the constitution that reserves tribal sovereignty.³⁷⁶ While this might be the equivalent of Justice Black refusing to vote for mandatory busing of public schools in order to implement desegregation orders because the word "bus" doesn't appear in the Constitution,³⁷⁷ Justice Thomas raised an important question that the Constitution does not answer. Since the Constitution does not assist tribal interests as much as, for example, the Tenth Amendment assists states,³⁷⁸ tribal interests may have to look to other, more pragmatic concerns and consequences that will persuade the Court. Tribal advocates in the Wagnon case did attempt to persuade the Court by identifying considerable consequences that would arise from a ruling in favor of the State of Kansas, but these concerns did not persuade the Court in that instance.

This Part discusses four areas of federal Indian law that are strong candidates for Supreme Court review – and suggestions for identifying important constitutional concerns – or considerable pragmatic concerns – that will both compel a grant of certiorari and garner enough votes to win a case here and there.

A. Tribal Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction over Nonmembers

1. Tribal Criminal Jurisdiction

One area of difficulty for tribal advocates will be the area of tribal criminal jurisdiction. As the following discussion shows, there are several constitutional concerns that weigh against tribal interests, but there may be ³⁷⁴ See Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. at 685-86 (citing 26 U.S.C. § 1; North American Oil Consol. v. Burnet, 386 U.S. 417, 424 (1932)).

³⁷⁵ See Matthew L.M. Fletcher, The Power to Tax, The Power to Destroy, and the Michigan Tribal-State Tax Agreements, 82 U. DET. MERCY L. REV. 1, 27 (2004).

³⁷⁶ See United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 218-19 (2004) (Thomas, J., concurring).

³⁷⁷ See ROSEN, supra note __, at 157.

³⁷⁸ E.g., New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144, 166 (1992); Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians v. Superior Court, 148 P.3d 1126, 1135-36 (Cal. 2006).

some room to persuade the Court that tribal criminal jurisdiction is important for pragmatic reasons.

The Supreme Court recently decided not to hear *Means v. Navajo Nation*³⁷⁹ and a companion case, Morris v. Tanner,³⁸⁰ impressive victories for tribal advocates. Means, a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, faces prosecution before the Navajo tribal courts for allegedly assaulting his family members.³⁸¹ He had argued that the Navajo Nation could not have jurisdiction over him because he was not a member of that tribe – he was a nonmember Indian.³⁸² In 1990, Means’ attorney, John Trebon, had successfully argued before the Supreme Court that Indian tribes cannot prosecute nonmember Indians in *Duro v. Reina*³⁸³ and was attempting to re-establish that rule by asking the Court to strike down the “Duro Fix,” upheld in United States v. Lara in a 7-2 decision.³⁸⁴ Lara seemed to answer the question of whether tribes could prosecute nonmember Indians, but two of the seven Justices in the majority – Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice O’Connor – are no longer on the Court. And, of the remaining five members in the majority, one of them – Justice Kennedy – said that under a different procedural posturing (an appeal of the tribal court conviction), they might have voted to strike down the Duro Fix.³⁸⁵ Justice Thomas stated that he’s waiting for the Court to come to its senses in the entire body of federal Indian law and is willing to reopen federal Indian law principles that have been settled for centuries.³⁸⁶ Both the ³⁷⁹ 432 F.3d 924 (9th Cir. 2005) (en banc), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 381 (2006) (hereinafter Means II).

³⁸⁰ No. 03-35922, 160 Fed. Appx. 600 (9th Cir., Dec. 22, 2005), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 379 (2006).

³⁸¹ See Means v. District Court of the Chinle Judicial District, No. SC-CV-61-98, VersusLaw No. 1999.NANN.0000013, at ¶ 21 (Navajo Nation Supreme Court, May 11, 1999), available at <http://www.tribal-institute.org/opinions/1999.NANN.0000013.htm> (hereinafter Means I).

³⁸² See Means II, 432 F.3d at 930-31.

³⁸³ 495 U.S. 676 (1990).

³⁸⁴ 541 U.S. 193 (2004).

³⁸⁵ See Lara, 541 U.S. at 214 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (“The present case, however, does not require us to address these difficult questions of constitutional dimension. Congress made it clear that its intent was to recognize and affirm tribal authority to try Indian nonmembers as inherent in tribal status. The proper occasion to test the legitimacy of the Tribe’s authority, that is, whether Congress had the power to do what it sought to do, was in the first, tribal proceeding. There, however, Lara made no objection to the Tribe’s authority to try him. In the second, federal proceeding, because the express rationale for the Tribe’s authority to try Lara—whether legitimate or not—was inherent sovereignty, not delegated federal power, there can be no double jeopardy violation.”).

³⁸⁶ See id. at 224 (Thomas, J., concurring) (“I do, however, agree that this case raises important constitutional questions that the Court does not begin to answer. The Court utterly fails to find any provision of the Constitution that gives Congress enumerated power to alter

Means and the Morris cases were appeals of tribal court convictions. That left only three Justices in the majority, with new Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Alito the remaining uncertain votes. In short, a 7-2 Lara decision could have turned into a 6-3 decision the other way. But the Court denied the petition for writ of certiorari.³⁸⁷

Counsel for Means and Morris could not have expected to win any of their appeals in the tribal courts and lower federal courts because of the decisiveness of the recent Lara decision. But they brought the cases in a manner strategically designed to attract the Court's attention, gambling that the Court was willing to entertain a challenge to the Duro Fix – and all tribal court prosecutions – because Indian tribes are not required by federal statute to appoint counsel for indigent defendants.³⁸⁸ Justice Breyer's majority opinion in Lara seemed to keep the question open.³⁸⁹ Moreover, nonmembers Indians are unlikely to be able to vote in tribal elections or are not eligible to sit on tribal court juries.³⁹⁰ Justice Kennedy, the force behind Duro v. Reina,³⁹¹ was particularly concerned about tribes that prosecute people without providing these criminal process rights.³⁹² tribal sovereignty. The Court cites the Indian Commerce Clause and the treaty power. ... I cannot agree that the Indian Commerce Clause “provide[s] Congress with plenary power to legislate in the field of Indian affairs.” ... [quoting Cotton Petroleum Corp. v. New Mexico, 490 U.S. 163, 192 (1989)]. At one time, the implausibility of this assertion at least troubled the Court, see, e.g., United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 378-379 (1886) (considering such a construction of the Indian Commerce Clause to be ‘very strained’), and I would be willing to revisit the question. Cf., e.g., United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598 (2000); United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995); id., at 584-593 (THOMAS, J., concurring).”

³⁸⁷ See Means v. Navajo Nation, 127 S. Ct. 381 (2006); Morris v. Tanner, 127 S. Ct. 379 (2006).

³⁸⁸ See 25 U.S.C. § 1302.

³⁸⁹ See Lara, 541 U.S. at 207-08.

³⁹⁰ Cf. Lara, 541 U.S. 208-09 (rejecting Lara's due process and equal protection arguments).

³⁹¹ 495 U.S. 676 (1990); see also Oliphant v. Schlie, 544 F.2d 1007, 1014 (9th Cir. 1976) (Kennedy, C.J., dissenting) (arguing that Indian tribes should not have criminal jurisdiction over nonmembers), rev'd sub nom., Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978).

³⁹² See Lara, 541 U.S. at 212 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (“The Constitution is based on a theory of original, and continuing, consent of the governed. Their consent depends on the understanding that the Constitution has established the federal structure, which grants the citizen the protection of two governments, the Nation and the State. Each sovereign must respect the proper sphere of the other, for the citizen has rights and duties as to both. See U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779, 838-839 (1995) (Kennedy, J., concurring). Here, contrary to this design, the National Government seeks to subject a citizen to the criminal jurisdiction of a third entity to be tried for conduct occurring wholly within the territorial borders of the Nation and one of the States. This is unprecedented. There is a historical exception for Indian tribes, but only to the limited extent that a member of a tribe

Even if the Court does not acknowledge an important constitutional concern favoring tribal interests, important and significant pragmatic concerns are present in these types of cases. Intermarriage between tribes and increased tribal employment opportunities are longstanding facts in most tribal communities, guaranteeing the presence of a significant population of nonmember Indians on most reservations.³⁹³ Taking away federal recognition of and respect for the convictions of nonmember Indians – like the Court did in Duro – created a significant loophole in tribal law enforcement that even a lumbering bear like Congress understood needed quick corrective action.³⁹⁴ The consequences of creating yet another loophole in the tribal-federal-state law enforcement jurisdictional scheme in Indian Country (sometimes referred to as a “maze,”³⁹⁵) – the first major loophole being the refusal of the Court to recognize tribal criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians in *Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe*³⁹⁶ – could be significant to Indian Country. If tribal advocates can provide empirical research that shows there was an increase in crime (both qualitatively and quantitatively) by non-Indians after Oliphant,³⁹⁷ it might persuade a law-and-order Justice that the constitutional concerns are not dispositive.

Of course, Indian tribes are not states or the federal government.³⁹⁸ State and federal law enforcement come from a long history and practice of coercing confessions from suspects³⁹⁹ (one of the reasons to guarantee an attorney and a jury of peers⁴⁰⁰) that is missing from most tribes. In fact, the consents to be subjected to the jurisdiction of his own tribe. See Duro, supra, at 693.... The majority today reaches beyond that limited exception.”)

³⁹³ See Carole Goldberg-Ambrose, Of Native Americans and Tribal Members: The Impact of Law on Indian Group Life, 28 LAW & SOC. REV. 1123, 1143-44 (1994); Wenona T. Singel, Labor Relations and Tribal Self-Governance, 80 N.D. L. REV. 691, 714-15 (2004).

³⁹⁴ See generally Newton, Permanent Legislation, supra note __; Skibine, Power Play, supra note __.

³⁹⁵ See Robert N. Clinton, Criminal Jurisdiction Over Indian Land: A Journey Through a Jurisdictional Maze, 18 ARIZ. L. REV. 503 (1976).

³⁹⁶ 435 U.S. 191 (1978).

³⁹⁷ Cf. Carole Goldberg & Duane Champagne, Is Public Law 280 Fit for the Twenty-First Century? Some Data at Last, 38 CONN. L. REV. 638 (2006).

³⁹⁸ See, e.g., Talton v. Mayes, 163 U.S. 376 (1896) (holding that the Bill of Rights does not apply to tribal governments because they are not arms of the federal government); Angela R. Riley, Good (Native) Governance, 107 COLUM. L. REV. 1049, 1050-51 (2007).

³⁹⁹ See, e.g., NATIONAL COMM’N ON LAW OBSERVANCE AND ENFORCEMENT, REPORT ON LAWLESSNESS IN LAW-ENFORCEMENT (1931); EMANUEL H. LAVINE, THE THIRD DEGREE: A DETAILED AND APPALLING EXPOSE OF POLICE BRUTALITY (1930); Note, The Third Degree, 43 HARV. L. REV. 617 (1930), cited in Paul G. Cassell, Miranda’s Social Costs: An Empirical Reassessment, 90 NW. U. L. REV. 387, 473, n. 501 (1996).

⁴⁰⁰ See Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 477 (1966) (“The principles announced today deal with the protection which must be given to the privilege against self-incrimination when conviction rate of Indians in federal courts is astronomically high because Indian defendants are far more likely to confess to crimes, a result (it is said) of the Indian tradition to admit mistakes in order to allow community healing to begin.⁴⁰¹ Moreover, Indian tribes often do not have the resources to fund a public defender system;⁴⁰² but neither do tribal courts sentence the guilty to jail as a matter of course.⁴⁰³

There were reasons why the Court didn't agree to hear the Means and Morris cases. First, the Court doesn't like to reverse a 7-2 decision so quickly after announcing it. With the recent turnover on the Court, quick reversals makes the Court look too much like a political body, subject to the political whims of its members.⁴⁰⁴ Second, neither the Means nor the Morris case met the list of due process factors that concerns Justice Kennedy. Both defendants were not indigent and were represented by counsel in tribal court.⁴⁰⁵ And Navajo law even provides for nonmember Indians like Means to participate in the individual is first subjected to police interrogation while in custody at the station or otherwise deprived of his freedom of action in any significant way. It is at this point that our adversary system of criminal proceedings commences, distinguishing itself at the outset from the inquisitorial system recognized in some countries. Under the system of warnings we delineate today or under any other system which may be devised and found effective, the safeguards to be erected about the privilege must come into play at this point.”)

⁴⁰¹ See, e.g., CARRIE E. GARROW & SARAH DEER, TRIBAL CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE 244 (2004) (discussing a “cultural requirement to full disclosure”) (citing RUPERT ROSS, DANCING WITH A GHOST: EXPLAINING INDIAN REALITY 13-14 (1992)).

⁴⁰² See Robert T. Anderson, Criminal Jurisdiction, Tribal Courts and Public Defenders, 13 KAN. J. L. & PUB. POL'Y 139, 144-45 (2003).

⁴⁰³ Cf., e.g., COHEN'S HANDBOOK 2005 ED., supra note __, § 9.09, at 769 (“Precontact tribal traditions often regulated conduct by sanctions which Anglo-American law does not consider penal.”); id., § 4.01[1][a], at 204-05 (noting that tribes often depended on “mockery, ostracism, ridicule, and religious sanctions” for criminal violations instead of imprisonment); WATSON SMITH & JOHN M. ROBERTS, ZUNI LAW: A FIELD OF VALUES 50-51 (1954) (noting that murder in traditional Zuni communities was considered a private offense – not public, similar to a tort – and not subject to public punishment).

⁴⁰⁴ See ROSEN, supra note __, at 233 (quoting Chief Justice Roberts: “People don't want the Court to seem to be lurching around because of changes in personnel.”).

⁴⁰⁵ See Means I, 1999.NANN.0000013, at ¶ 49 n. 11 (“The petitioner's attorney was asked whether Navajo Nation law affords criminal defendants all the rights guaranteed by the sixth amendment to the United States Constitution during oral argument, and he evaded the question. Although such is not required by the Indian Civil Rights Act of 1968, criminal defendants in the Navajo Nation court system are entitled to the appointment of counsel if they are indigent, and they are entitled to a jury composed of a fair cross-section of Navajo Nation population, including non-Indians and nonmember Indians. The petitioner has all the rights he would have in a state or federal court. See Navajo Rules of Criminal Procedure (1990).”); Morris v. Tanner, No. 99-36007, 16 Fed. Appx. 652, 653-54 (9th Cir., July 24, 2001) (describing motions made by Morris, presumably by counsel).

tribal politics (which he did) and even sit on juries (he refused to register).⁴⁰⁶ But the next case in the pipeline to the Court might include those factors.

What tribal advocates and policymakers should now be on the lookout for are appeals of tribal court convictions of nonmember Indians who are indigent, unrepresented, cannot sit on tribal court juries, and who are sentenced to even a single day of jail. Russell Means arguably now faces the justice of the Navajo Nation because he didn't meet those requirements. Forward-looking tribes are thinking about funding public defender offices and appointed counsel procedures and adopting rules that allow for criminal trial juries to include defendants' peers. And they are wise to do so.

2. Tribal Civil Jurisdiction over Nonmembers

In this area, there is not the same importance to the Court's constitutional concerns as there is in the criminal jurisdiction area, but the same questions are present.

Justice Scalia's majority opinion in Nevada v. Hicks held that tribal courts do not have jurisdiction over federal civil rights claims by tribal members against state officers for actions that occurred in Indian Country.⁴⁰⁷ However, the opinion acknowledged an open question – “We leave open the question of tribal-court jurisdiction over nonmember defendants in general.”⁴⁰⁸ In a concurring opinion, Justice Souter raised several questions as to whether tribal courts should ever have jurisdiction over nonmember defendants.⁴⁰⁹ Justice Souter's opinion suggests that at least some members of the Court worry that subjecting nonmembers to the processes and laws of Indian tribes might be a violation of due process.⁴¹⁰ There seems to be a worry that tribal laws are “unusually difficult for an outsider to sort out.”⁴¹¹ As a response, Indian law scholars have critiqued the very notion of implicit divestiture, arguing that the Court's authority in the area is questionable and flawed.⁴¹² Others argue that respect for tribal sovereignty should compel the Court to recognize tribal court jurisdiction over nonmembers.⁴¹³ Still others have argued that the tribal law that might be confusing to an outsider never ⁴⁰⁶ See Means I, 1999.NANN.0000013, at ¶¶ 47-49.

⁴⁰⁷ 533 U.S. 353, 364 (2001).

⁴⁰⁸ Hicks, 533 U.S. at 358 n. 2.

⁴⁰⁹ See Hicks, 533 U.S. at 375-86 (Souter, J., concurring).

⁴¹⁰ See Hicks, 533 U.S. at 384-85.

⁴¹¹ Hicks, 533 U.S. at 385.

⁴¹² E.g., LaVelle, Outtakes, supra note __.

⁴¹³ E.g., Ann Tweedy, The Liberal Forces Driving the Supreme Court's Divestment and Debasement of Tribal Sovereignty, 18 BUFF. PUB. INT. L. J. 147 (2000).

applies to outsiders and that tribal courts apply Anglo-American law to nonmembers.⁴¹⁴

At one point, the Court acknowledged a concern that divesting tribal courts of jurisdiction would be detrimental to tribal self-government and the development of tribal institutions,⁴¹⁵ but the Court does not appear to be concerned with these questions any longer. Tribal advocates should develop pragmatic reasons that would persuade the Court that preserving tribal civil jurisdiction over nonmembers is important.

B. Federal Statutes of General Applicability

Another area of difficulty is the question of whether federal laws that do not state on their face that they apply to Indian tribes actually do apply to Indian tribes.⁴¹⁶ Federal employment rights statutes such as the Fair Labor Standards Act⁴¹⁷ and the National Labor Relations Act⁴¹⁸ are silent as to whether they apply to Indian tribes as employers. Other federal statutes, such as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964,⁴¹⁹ explicitly exclude Indian tribes while others, such as certain criminal⁴²⁰ and environmental⁴²¹ statutes, explicitly include Indian tribes. The federal circuit courts of appeal have adopted differing – and one could argue, conflicting – common law tests to determine whether or not the federal statute of general applicability will apply.⁴²²

Whether the Court – assuming it agrees to hear a case in this area (it has not done so yet) – decides that a federal statute of general applicability will apply to Indian tribes most likely will depend far more on the federal policy announced by Congress in the statute than on foundational principles ⁴¹⁴ E.g., Matthew L.M. Fletcher, Toward a Theory of Intertribal and Intratribal Common Law, 43 HOUS. L. REV. 701 (2006).

⁴¹⁵ E.g., National Farmers Union Ins. Cos. v. Crow Tribe, 471 U.S. 845 (1985); Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217 (1959).

⁴¹⁶ See generally COHEN'S HANDBOOK 2005 ED., supra note __, § 2.03, at 128-32; William Buffalo & Kevin J. Wadzinski, Application of Federal and State Labor and Employment Laws to Indian Tribal Employers, 25 U. MEMPHIS L. REV. 1365 (1995); Singel, Labor Relations, supra note __.

⁴¹⁷ See Reich v. Great Lakes Indian Fish & Wildlife Commission, 4 F.3d 490 (7th Cir. 1993).

⁴¹⁸ See NLRB v. Pueblo of San Juan, 276 F.3d 1186 (10th Cir. 2002).

⁴¹⁹ See Charland v. Little Six, Inc., 198 F.3d 249 (8th Cir. 1999) (Title VII).

⁴²⁰ See Seneca-Cayuga Tribe of Oklahoma v. National Indian Gaming Commission, 327 F.3d 1019 (10th Cir. 2003) (Johnson Act).

⁴²¹ Cf. generally James M. Grijalva, The Origins of EPA's Indian Program, 15 KAN. J. L. & PUB. POL'Y 191 (2006).

⁴²² See, e.g., Singel, Labor Relations, supra note __, at 702-03 nn. 87 & 94 (listing cases from different circuits that follow conflicting approaches).

of tribal sovereignty. Consider a D.C. Circuit case, San Manuel Indian Bingo and Casino v. National Labor Relations Board,⁴²³ for example. Tribal advocates argued forcefully that foundational principles of tribal sovereignty and federal Indian law compel the court to find that the National Labor Relations Act does not apply to Indian tribes or their business interests,⁴²⁴ arguments all but ignored by the D.C. Circuit panel.⁴²⁵ But the case could have come down to non-Indian law principles: first, whether Congress originally intended the Act to apply to tribal businesses in 1935;⁴²⁶ and, second, if not, whether the Act's scope can change over decades to encompass the relatively recent phenomenon of successful tribal business operations employing numerous nonmembers. The second issue, even if the D.C. Circuit does not reach it, might become an important constitutional reason for the Court to grant certiorari in an appeal from either side.

C. Tenth Amendment

A recent addition to the discussion of federal Indian law is the Tenth Amendment. Long considered to be part of the recognition of the historical fact that the states have little or no stake in the federal-tribal relationship,⁴²⁷ the Rehnquist Court's buttressing of states' rights appears to have emboldened states' claims based on the Tenth Amendment against tribal interests in recent years.⁴²⁸ There are two major areas in which the states are making Tenth Amendment claims. First, states are arguing that the Department of Interior's authority to take land into trust for the benefit of Indian tribes – and the ⁴²³ 475 F.3d 1306 (D.C. Cir. 2007).

⁴²⁴ See Petitioners' Opening Brief at 21-34, San Manuel Indian Bingo and Casino v. National Labor Relations Board, 475 F.3d 1306 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (Nos. 05-1392 & 05-1432).

⁴²⁵ See San Manuel, 475 F.3d at 1314-19.

⁴²⁶ See Singel, Labor Relations, supra note __, at 719-25 (arguing that Congress did not).

⁴²⁷ See Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44, 62 (1996) ("If anything, the Indian Commerce Clause accomplishes a greater transfer of power from the States to the Federal Government than does the Interstate Commerce Clause. This is clear enough from the fact that the States still exercise some authority over interstate trade but have been divested of virtually all authority over Indian commerce and Indian tribes."); Oneida County, N.Y. v. Oneida Indian Nation of N.Y., 470 U.S. 226, 234 (1985); Cotton Petroleum Corp. v. New Mexico, 490 U.S. 163, __ (1989); Carcieri v. Kempthorne, __ F.3d __, __ (1st Cir. 2007) (en banc); Cayuga Indian Nation v. Cuomo, 565 F. Supp. 1297, 1307-08 (W.D. N.Y. 1983); Mohegan Tribe v. State of Connecticut, 528 F. Supp. 1359, 1368-69 (D. Conn. 1982) (quoting National League of Cities v. Usery, 426 U.S. 833, 852 (1976)); AMAR, supra note __, at 107-08.

⁴²⁸ E.g., Carcieri v. Kempthorne, 290 F. Supp. 2d 167, 189 (D. R.I. 2003), aff'd, __ F.3d __ (1st Cir. 2007) (en banc); City of Roseville v. Norton, 219 F. Supp. 2d 130, 154 (D. D.C. 2002), aff'd, 348 F.3d 1020 (D.C. Cir. 2003), cert. denied sub nom., Citizens for Safer Communities v. Norton, 541 U.S. 974 (2004); In re A.B., 663 N.W.2d 625, 636-37 (N.D. 2003), cert. denied sub nom., Hoots v. K.B., 541 U.S. 972 (2004).

concomitant immunity from state tax and regulatory authority – violates states’ reserved rights under the Tenth Amendment.⁴²⁹ Second, in one state supreme court, tribal political activities that appear to interfere with state political activities have triggered the Tenth Amendment in a manner sufficient to abrogate tribal sovereign immunity.⁴³⁰ The question that the Court could decide soon is whether the Tenth Amendment is important enough to limit certain exercises of tribal sovereignty.

D. Indian Land Claims

One final area worth discussing here is the question of longstanding Indian land claims. Here, the Court appears to recognize no constitutional concerns that weigh in favor of Indian tribes, but there are significant pragmatic concerns. The Court is very worried that Indian land claims and other claims to sovereignty with upset the “settled expectations” of private landowners and state and local governments.⁴³¹ But, if there are significant constitutional concerns, they are property rights that should favor of the tribal and federal interests.⁴³² However, these cases are examples of where pragmatic concerns appear to trump any constitutional concerns.

In 2005’s City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation,⁴³³ the Supreme Court rewrote the rules on “ancient” tribal claims to sovereignty by allowing – for the first time in recent memory and with the last time benefiting private property owners⁴³⁴ – states and local governments opposing tribal sovereignty and Indian tribes to raise equitable defenses.⁴³⁵ In other words, the Court held that the Nation (and the United States) waited too long to bring their claims.⁴³⁶ Although City of Sherrill did not adjudicate an Indian land claim (it had already been settled),⁴³⁷ the Second Circuit relied upon the decision as the basis for dismissing land claims in Cayuga Indian Nation v. Pataki,⁴³⁸ claims valued at hundreds of millions of dollars.⁴³⁹ The State of New York and its subdivisions now argue in every land claims pleading that too much time has ⁴²⁹ See Carcieri, 290 F. Supp. 2d at 189-90; City of Roseville, 219 F. Supp. 2d at 154.

⁴³⁰ See Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians v. Superior Court, 148 P.3d 1126, 1135-36 (Cal. 2006).

⁴³¹ City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation, 544 U.S. 197, 218 (2005).

⁴³² Cf. Babbitt v. Youpee, 519 U.S. 234 (1998); Hodel v. Irving, 481 U.S. 704 (1987).

⁴³³ 544 U.S. 197 (2005).

⁴³⁴ The last time was Felix v. Patrick, 145 U.S. 317 (1892).

⁴³⁵ See City of Sherrill, 544 U.S. at 213-14.

⁴³⁶ See id. at 217-19.

⁴³⁷ See id. at 202.

⁴³⁸ 413 F.3d 266 (2nd Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 126 S. Ct. 2022 (2006).

⁴³⁹ See id. at 268 ($248 million).

passed to restore tribal sovereignty and Indian lands.⁴⁴⁰ It seems certain that tribes bringing land claims and other long-standing claims to sovereignty must traverse this new (and hostile) world of equitable defenses in order to prevail. The very notion of an Indian land claim may soon disappear. States and local governments may have found their trump card in dealing with the troublesome tribal claims to land and sovereignty.

But the opponents of tribal land claims may be too smart for their own good. The dismissal of Indian land claims on the basis that too much time has passed since the transactions in which Indian land ownership passed into the hands of non-Indians and non-tribal governments may reduce state and local government liability, but the liability could shift to the federal government. Thousands of Indian land claims involving millions upon millions of acres now lay dormant, preserved in accordance with a 1982 federal statute,⁴⁴¹ waiting to be activated and prosecuted by the Department of Justice. Many, if not the vast majority, of these land claims are based upon events that transpired long ago and could be subject to the equitable defenses the City of Sherrill Court held could be applied to “ancient” tribal claims. If these claims are barred by the passage of time, it will be because of the failure of the United States to prosecute the land claims. As a result, the United States will be liable to the Indian tribes who lost out on their land claims. Tens of billions of dollars – and perhaps hundreds of billions of dollars – are at risk as a direct result of the City of Sherrill and Cayuga Indian Nation cases.⁴⁴²

Consider an older case. In 1968, the Supreme Court decided Menominee Tribe of Indians v. United States.⁴⁴³ The posture of the case was most unusual in that both the named parties – the Tribe and the Government – asked the Court to affirm a Court of Claims ruling.⁴⁴⁴ The State of Wisconsin, appearing as amicus curiae, was the only party arguing in favor of reversal.⁴⁴⁵ The case arose when Congress enacted the Menominee Termination Act of 1954, disbanding the tribal government and transferring the Tribe’s assets to a private corporation owned and operated by the tribal members.⁴⁴⁶ Menominees continued to exercise their hunting and fishing rights guaranteed

⁴⁴⁰ And with some success. Compare Shinnecock Indian Nation v. New York, 2006 WL 3501099 (E.D. N.Y., Nov. 28, 2006) (dismissing land claims), with Oneida Indian Nation of N.Y. v. New York, 2007 WL 1500489 (N.D. N.Y., May 21, 2007) (preserving land claims).

⁴⁴¹ 28 U.S.C. § 2415(b).

⁴⁴² See Matthew L.M. Fletcher, The land claims time-bomb, INDIAN COUNTRY TODAY, Jan. 19, 2007, available at <http://www.indiancountry.com/content.cfm?id=1096414372>.

⁴⁴³ 391 U.S. 404 (1968).

⁴⁴⁴ See id. at 407 (citing Menominee Tribe of Indians v. United States, 388 F.2d 998 (Ct. Cl. 1967)).

⁴⁴⁵ See id.

⁴⁴⁶ See id. at 408.

by the 1854 Treaty of Wolf River, however, and the State began to enforce its laws and regulations on them, culminating in a Wisconsin Supreme Court decision holding that the 1954 termination act had abrogated the 1854 treaty rights.⁴⁴⁷ The Tribe then turned to the federal claims courts and sought just compensation under the Fifth Amendment against the United States for the loss of the treaty-protected hunting and fishing rights. The Court of Claims held that the Tribe wasn't entitled to compensation because the treaty rights had not been abrogated,⁴⁴⁸ leading to the unusual posture of the argument before the Supreme Court, with the United States hoping to avoid liability by convincing the Court to strike down the Wisconsin Supreme Court's decision.

There are reasons to believe that same scenario could play out in the context of Indian land claims barred by equitable defenses – and perhaps it will play out that way in hundreds or even thousands of cases. First, in these cases, the basis for bringing a land claim is a violation of a federal statute or an Indian treaty provision. The New York land claims, for example, arise under the Trade and Intercourse Acts, where the federal government had a duty to prevent – and if not prevent, then to seek a reversal of – the underlying transactions leading to the land claims.⁴⁴⁹ In the case of land claims arising out of treaty provisions, the claims are based on a treaty provision that places an affirmative mandate upon the federal government to prevent the dispossession of Indian lands. In many, many circumstances, federal government officials participated in the acts of dispossession – clear acts of illegality.⁴⁵⁰ Second, given that the federal government often is the only party capable of suing to recover Indian lands or to seek compensation because of state sovereign immunity,⁴⁵¹ the equitable defense applies against the government for failure to act. In effect, the federal government is at fault and therefore culpable.⁴⁵² ⁴⁴⁷ See id. at 407-08 (citing State v. Sanapaw, 124 N.W.2d 41 (Wis. 1963)).

⁴⁴⁸ See id. at 407.

⁴⁴⁹ See generally Robert N. Clinton & Margaret Tobey Hotopp, Judicial Enforcement of the Federal Restraints on Alienation of Indian Land: The Origins of the Eastern Land Claims, 31 ME. L. REV. 17 (1979).

⁴⁵⁰ E.g., Ewert v. Bluejacket, 259 U.S. 129 (1922).

⁴⁵¹ See, e.g., Idaho v. United States, 533 U.S. 262 (2001) (suit by United States on behalf of Indian tribe against state); Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak and Circle Village, 501 U.S. 775, 783-85 (1991) (rejecting tribal suit against state on basis of state sovereign immunity).

⁴⁵² In fact, Congress enacted the Indian Claims Limitation Act of 1982, Pub. L. 97-394 (1982), in part, due to concerns that the United States faced massive liability for failure to prosecute tribal land claims. See H.R. No. 97-954, at 6 (1982) (citing Covelo Indian Community v. Watt, 551 F. Supp. 366 (D. D.C. 1982), aff'd, 1982 U.S. App. LEXIS 23138 (D.C. Cir., Dec. 21, 1982)).

Moreover, before any tribe can proceed with a claim under Section 2415, the federal government must exercise discretion in determining whether or not to prosecute the claim on behalf of the tribe.⁴⁵³ In other words, each Section 2415 claim places a strict duty on the federal government. Since 1983, when the government published the land claims in the Federal Register,⁴⁵⁴ the Department of Justice has chosen to take up only a few.⁴⁵⁵ Over two decades have passed since the government published the land claims. Given the harshness of the equity rules announced by federal courts, it may already be too late for the federal government to recover. Federal government liability may be accruing this moment.

Conclusion ... and a Caveat

What remains of federal Indian law in Supreme Court jurisprudence? What remains of the rule of law in this entire field? The foundational principles that resonated with the Marshall, Warren, and Burger Courts have not been persuasive to the Rehnquist or Roberts Courts. Given the Court's unwillingness to trace these foundational principles to the Constitution, it would appear that these principles no longer carry the day. Did these principles ever carry the day in the Supreme Court, even for the Courts that created and cemented them? Is "ruthless pragmatism" the guiding principle of the Roberts Court's Indian law cases? Perhaps federal Indian law is dead, if it ever existed.

Observers of federal Indian law often chuckle when they read in The Brethren about how Supreme Court Justice Brennan once referred to Antoine v. Washington,⁴⁵⁶ a 1975 case about the prosecution of a pair of Colville tribal members, as a "chickenshit" case. Or how Justice Harlan referred to 1970's *Toohnippah v. Hickel*⁴⁵⁷ as a "peewee" case. Indian law advocates chuckle ⁴⁵³ See 28 U.S.C. § 2415 (b) ("That, for those claims that are on either of the two lists published pursuant to the Indian Claims Limitation Act of 1982, any right of action shall be barred unless the complaint is filed within (1) one year after the Secretary of the Interior has published in the Federal Register a notice rejecting such claim or (2) three years after the date the Secretary of the Interior has submitted legislation or legislative report to Congress to resolve such claim or more than two years after a final decision has been rendered in applicable administrative proceedings required by contract or by law, whichever is later.") (emphasis added).

⁴⁵⁴ See 48 FED. REG. 13698 (Mar. 25, 1983).

⁴⁵⁵ E.g., Bay Mills Indian Cmty. v. W. United Life Assurance Co., No. 2:96-CV-275, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 20782 (W.D. Mich. Dec. 11, 1998), aff'd, 208 F.3d 212 (6th Cir. 2000); Bay Mills Indian Community v. State, 626 N.W.2d 169 (Mich. App. 2001), cert. denied, 122 S. Ct. 1303 (2002).

⁴⁵⁶ 420 U.S. 194 (1975).

⁴⁵⁷ 397 U.S. 598 (1970).

because the Supreme Court accepts far more Indian law cases for review than would be expected, given the decreasing opportunities to “arouse the judicial libido.”

In 1991, H.W. Perry interviewed several Supreme Court Justices and some of their former clerks in a study to determine what makes a case “certworthy,” or worthy being granted certiorari. One of the Justices, who identified him or herself as a “Westerner,” referred to Indian law cases as “crud cases” worthy of assignment only to junior Justices. But in the same breath, the Westerner Justice said, “Actually, I think the Indian cases are kind of fascinating. It goes into history and you learn about it, and the way we abused some of the Indians, we, that is the U.S. government....” That Justice then noted that, in the Rehnquist Court, there were three Westerners and they all had a special interest in western water law and in Indian law. Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice O’Connor are both from Arizona and Justice Kennedy is from California. Given that the Supreme Court’s “Rule of Four” states that it takes the vote of four of the nine Justices to grant certiorari in any given case, it would appear that in many Indian law cases, the three Westerners needed only one more vote to grant “cert.” Perhaps this helped to explain why the Court heard so many Indian law cases during the Rehnquist Court era.

But Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice O’Connor are no longer on the Court. They’ve been replaced by Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Alito, neither of whom could be called Westerners. The only Westerner Justice that remains is Justice Kennedy. Two Indian law cases have been accepted this Term already, but upon closer reflection, one realizes they are not cases about federal Indian law principles, but rather are cases about statutory interpretation and administrative law. In the 2005 Term, the Court heard only one Indian law case, *Wagnon v. Prairie Band of Potawatomi Indians*⁴⁵⁸ – and that case had been granted cert. during the 2004 Term when all three Westerners remained on the Court.⁴⁵⁹

Is Indian law no longer a favorite of Supreme Court certiorari decisions? Consider the cases that the Roberts Court has refused to hear: (1) Cayuga Indian Nation v. Pataki,⁴⁶⁰ where the Second Circuit Court of Appeals struck down Cayuga land claims amounting to more than $200 million; (2) *South Dakota v. Department of Interior*⁴⁶¹ and Utah v. Shivwits Band of Paiute Indians,⁴⁶² two claims from states arguing that the federal law allowing the Bureau of Indian Affairs to take land into trust for Indian tribes ⁴⁵⁸ 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005).

⁴⁵⁹ 543 U.S. 1185 (2005).

⁴⁶⁰ 413 F.3d 266 (2d Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 126 S. Ct. 2022 (2006).

⁴⁶¹ 423 F.3d 790 (8th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 67 (2006).

⁴⁶² 428 F.3d 966 (10th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 38 (2006).

was unconstitutional; and (3) *Means v. Navajo Nation*⁴⁶³ and Morris v. Tanner,⁴⁶⁴ two cases arguing that the federal statute affirming that tribes have criminal jurisdiction over nonmember Indians was unconstitutional. While there were plausible reasons for the Court to deny cert. in these cases, perhaps the sole Westerner remaining on the Court can no longer garner the votes.⁴⁶⁵ For the eight non-Westerners on the Court, perhaps Indian law simply isn't "certworthy." We'll see how the Roberts Court develops. As many observers know, the chief justice argued two Indian law cases before the Supreme Court – *Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie*⁴⁶⁶ (on behalf of the State of Alaska) and *Rice v. Cayetano*⁴⁶⁷ (on behalf of the State of Hawaii), both of which were devastating losses for Indian Country – so we know he is knowledgeable about some aspects of Indian law. One question yet to be answered is whether the Chief Justice transforms his professional expertise and experience in federal Indian law questions into votes for certiorari.

Indian law might be dead after all. The principles that guided the Court over the first 200 years of its Indian law jurisprudence are shadows of their former selves. And, with the decline in the Court's docket, there are fewer and fewer cases that attract the Court's constitutional interest in a way that would allow tribal advocates to roll back some of the decisions disfavoring tribal interests.

Miigwetch.

⁴⁶³ 432 F.3d 924 (9th Cir. 2005) (en banc), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 381 (2006).

⁴⁶⁴ No. 03-35922, 160 Fed. Appx. 600 (9th Cir., Dec. 22, 2005), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 379 (2006)..

⁴⁶⁵ See Matthew L.M. Fletcher, The S. Ct.'s New Indian Law Agenda?, For the Seventh Generation Blog (April 4, 2007), available at <http://tribal-law.blogspot.com/2007/04/s-cts-new-indian-law-agenda.html> (noting that that the Roberts Court accepted no new Indian law cases in the October 2006 Term).

⁴⁶⁶ 520 U.S. 522 (1998).

⁴⁶⁷ 528 U.S. 495 (2000).