

15-1874

---

---

IN THE
United States Court of Appeals for the
FOURTH CIRCUIT

---

PRO-FOOTBALL, INC.,

Plaintiff-Appellant

v.

AMANDA BLACKHORSE; MARCUS BRIGGS-CLOUD; PHILLIP GOVER;
JILLIAN PAPPAN; COURTNEY TSOTIGH,

Defendants-Appellees

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Intervenor-Appellee

---

ON APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE EASTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA (ALEXANDRIA DIVISION)

---

---

BRIEF OF AMICI CURIAE CONSTITUTIONAL LAW PROFESSORS IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFF AND SUPPORTING REVERSAL

---

---

RODNEY A. SMOLLA
4601 Concord Pike
Wilmington, DE 19803
(302) 477-2278

Counsel for Amici Curiae

FLOYD ABRAMS
CAHILL GORDON & REINDEL LLP
80 Pine Street
New York, NY 10005
(212) 701-3000

Counsel for Amici Curiae

Statement Pursuant to Fed. R. App. P. 29(a), (c)(5)

All parties have consented to the filing of this brief. No counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no counsel for a party (nor a party itself) made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person other than amici or their counsel made a monetary contribution to its preparation or submission.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

IDENTITY AND INTERESTS OF THE AMICI .....	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT .....	1
ARGUMENT .....	5
I.    SECTION 1052(A) IS A BRAZEN EXERCISE IN VIEWPOINT DISCRIMINATION .....	5
II.   TRADEMARK REGISTRATION IS NOT GOVERNMENT SPEECH ...	9
A.   Treating Trademark Registration as Government Speech Contradicts the Rationales Underlying the Government Speech Doctrine .....	9
B.   Treating Trademark Registration as Government Speech is Contrary to the Government Speech Doctrines Emanating from Sumnum and Walker .....	12
III.  DENIAL OF TRADEMARK REGISTRATION IS NOT A LIMITATION ON THE CONFERRAL OF A GOVERNMENT BENEFIT ESSENTIAL TO DEFINING THE CONTOURS OF A GOVERNMENT PROGRAM.....	16
IV.  SECTION 1052(A) CANNOT BE SUSTAINED AS A VALID REGULATION OF COMMERCIAL SPEECH .....	21
CONCLUSION .....	30
APPENDIX: List of Amici Curiae Law Professors.....	A1

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page(s)
Cases
Agency for Int’l Dev. v. Alliance for Open Soc’y Int’l, Inc. , 133 S. Ct. 2321 (2013).....	17, 20
Ariz. Free Enter. Club’s Freedom Club PAC v. Bennett , 131 S. Ct. 2806 (2011).....	8
Ass’n for Private Sector Colls. and Univs. v. Duncan , 681 F.2d 427 (D.C. Cir. 2012).....	24
B&amp;B Hardware, Inc. v. Hargis Indus., Inc. , 135 S. Ct. 1293 (2015).....	14, 18
Bigelow v. Virginia , 421 U.S. 809 (1975).....	27
Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Wis. System v. Southworth , 529 U.S. 217 (2000).....	11
Bob Jones Univ. v. United States , 461 U.S. 574 (1983).....	19
Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prod. Corp. , 463 U.S. 60 (1983).....	28-29
Brandenburg v. Ohio , 395 U.S. 444 (1969).....	11-12
Carey v. Population Servs., Int’l , 431 U.S. 678 (1977).....	28
Cent. Hudson Gas &amp; Elec. Corp. v. Pub. Serv. Comm’n , 447 U.S. 557 (1980).....	21-22, 29
Christian Legal Soc’y Chapter of the Univ. of Cal., Hastings Coll. of Law v. Martinez , 561 U.S. 661 (2010).....	20

Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, Inc. , 507 U.S. 410 (1993).....	30
FCC v. League of Women Voters of Cal. , 468 U.S. 364 (1984).....	16-17, 20
Rumsfeld v. Forum for Academic and Institutional Rights , 547 U.S. 47 (2006).....	20
Greater New Orleans Broad. Ass’n, Inc. v. United States , 527 U.S. 173 (1999).....	27
Grove City Coll. v. Bell , 465 U.S. 555 (1984).....	19
Healy v. James , 408 U.S. 169 (1972).....	16-17
Legal Servs. Corp. v. Velazquez , 531 U.S. 533 (2001).....	10, 17, 21
Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly , 553 U.S. 525 (2001).....	29
Minneapolis Star &amp; Tribune Co. v. Minn. Comm’r of Revenue , 460 U.S. 575 (1983).....	8
N.Y. Times Co. v. Sullivan , 376 U.S. 254 (1964).....	27
Nike, Inc. v. Kasky , 539 U.S. 654 (2003).....	25
In re Old Glory Condom Corp. , 26 U.S.P.Q.2D 1216 (T.T.A.B. 1993).....	14
In re Orthopedic Bone Screw Prods. Liab. Litig. , 193 F.3d 781 (3rd Cir. 1999).....	24
Perry v. Sindermann , 408 U.S. 593 (1972).....	16
Pleasant Grove City, Utah v. Summum , 555 U.S. 460 (2009).....	9, 12-13

R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul , 505 U.S. 377 (1992).....	6-8
Radiance Found., Inc. v. NAACP , 786 F.3d 316 (4th Cir. 2015) .....	23
Reed v. Town of Gilbert, Ariz. , 135 S. Ct. 2218 (2015).....	7-8, 27
Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Wash. , 461 U.S. 540 (1983).....	20
Riley v. Nat’l Fed’n of the Blind of N.C., Inc. , 487 U.S. 781 (1988).....	24
Rosenberger v. Rector and Visitors of Univ. of Va. , 515 U.S. 819 (1995).....	17
Rust v. Sullivan , 500 U.S. 173 (1991).....	10, 20
Simon &amp; Schuster, Inc. v. Members of N.Y. State Crime Victims Bd. , 502 U.S. 105 (1991).....	8, 30
Snyder v. Phelps , 562 U.S. 443 (2013).....	6, 12
Sorrell v. IMS Health Inc. , 131 S. Ct. 2653 (2011).....	8, 26-28
Texas v. Johnson , 491 U.S. 397 (1989).....	5, 11
Thompson v. W. States Med. Ctr. , 535 U.S. 357 (2002).....	28
In re Trade-Mark Cases , 100 U.S. 82 (1879).....	14
United States v. Alvarez , 132 S. Ct. 2537 (2012).....	6

United States v. Stevens,
559 U.S. 460 (2010).....6, 12

United States v. United Foods, Inc.,
533 U.S. 405 (2001).....27

Virginia v. Black,
538 U.S. 343 (2003).....11

Walker v. Texas Div., Sons of Confederate Veterans, Inc., 135 S. Ct. 2239 (2015).....passim

West Virginia Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette,
319 U.S. 624 (1943).....12

Statutes

15 U.S.C.
§ 1052(a) .....passim

Other Authorities

Jennifer E. Rothman, Commercial Speech, Commercial Use, and the Intellectual Property Quagmire, 101 Va. L. Rev. (forthcoming Nov. 2015)..... 23-24

United States’ Reply Mem. of Law on 4/14/15, Pro-Football, Inc., v. Blackhorse, No. 14-cv-01043 (E.D. Va. April 14, 2015) ECF No. 127. ....18

IDENTITY AND INTERESTS OF THE AMICI

Amici are professors who regularly engage in legal scholarship and litigation matters germane to the First Amendment, including the intersection of freedom of speech and intellectual property. Their interest in this litigation is respectfully to offer their considered views regarding the principles to be applied in determining whether 15 U.S.C. § 1052(a) of the Lanham Act violates the First Amendment.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Section 1052(a) of the Lanham Act is a brazen exercise in viewpoint discrimination. On its face and as its animating purpose, it exists to discriminate against expression perceived by the government to be disparaging and offensive. Under the strict scrutiny standard applicable to viewpoint discrimination, the law cannot stand in light of the bedrock principle underlying the First Amendment that government may not penalize speech merely because it is deemed offensive or disagreeable. These principles apply to laws that burden speech just as they apply to laws that fully censor it.

Section 1052(a) is plainly unconstitutional unless some alternative First Amendment doctrine is applicable exempting the statute from the normal strictures forbidding viewpoint discrimination. Several have been posited. One claim is that trademark registration is “government speech” and thus outside the coverage of the First Amendment. A second argument is that trademark registration is a government benefit, not a right, and that what appears to be viewpoint discrimination is merely the government acting to shape the contours of a benefit program. And finally, it may be claimed that regulation of disparaging trademarks constitute a valid regulation of commercial speech. None of these arguments is sound.

Denial of trademark registration does not fit either the theoretical justifications that support the government speech doctrine, or the doctrinal tests that have emerged to define the doctrine's contours. The core theoretical justification for the government speech doctrine is that voters may invoke a political check to approve or disapprove of the positions taken by government in the exercise of its own speech. Trademark registration is not an exercise of the government "speaking" as an incident to its acts of governing, however, for the government possesses no general governing power to police offensive or disparaging speech. More fundamentally, the entire purpose of the First Amendment is to prevent the government from exercising its political will to burden private expression. To treat the cancellation of the Redskins mark as not even "implicating" the First Amendment, on the ground that it is some sort of government speech, is thus to turn First Amendment principle on its head.

Trademark registration is similarly outside the doctrinal definition of government speech. Trademarks are understood in society as the identifiers of private speakers. Trademarks are not created by the government, aligned with the government, used as “government IDs,” or used as platforms for government expression. The government does not exercise control or approval of a trademark’s design or composition. Rather, trademark is private expression. If the refusal to grant trademark registration were deemed government speech, then the government speech doctrine could effectively swallow virtually all free speech law, for any action by the government penalizing disfavored topics could simply be recast as the government itself speaking, thereby avoiding the proscriptions of the First Amendment.

The doctrine of unconstitutional conditions bars the government from denying government benefits to speakers on the condition that those speakers surrender First Amendment rights they would otherwise enjoy. While the unconstitutional conditions doctrine does not bar government from using the leverage of a public benefits program to prevent discriminatory conduct (as, for example, with gender discrimination provisions of Title IX), § 1052(a) is not an anti-discrimination provision, and the Washington Redskins franchise does not stand accused of any discriminatory conduct. Similarly, the unconstitutional conditions doctrine does not bar the government from restricting funding in a manner incident to the shaping of a spending program. Section 1052(a) is not such a spending program, however, but rather a classic example of what the unconstitutional conditions doctrine forbids: using the leverage of the grant or denial of a government benefit to penalize viewpoints the government finds offensive.

Finally, § 1052(a) cannot be defended as a valid regulation of commercial speech. It is entirely the non-commercial elements of the communication that § 1052(a) regulates, the elements deemed by the government to be culturally and politically offensive. The cancellation of the Redskins mark is thus not in any authentic sense commercial regulation at all, and ought not be analyzed under commercial speech doctrine.

Even if the rules governing regulation of commercial speech are applied, the cancellation of the Redskins mark remains unconstitutional. One of the most powerful themes of modern commercial speech law is that the government may not invoke, as its “substantial interest” justifying regulation, the perceived offensiveness of the message communicated. The government is disqualified from invoking the false cover of commercial speech regulation to do no more than penalize expression it finds offensive, for such a paternalistic purpose is per se excluded from the interests that may be invoked to justify regulation.

With no plausible exception to classic free speech principles available to defend it, the emperor has no clothes, and § 1052(a) is exposed for what it is: a naked exercise in unconstitutional viewpoint discrimination.

ARGUMENT

I. SECTION 1052(A) IS A BRAZEN EXERCISE IN VIEWPOINT DISCRIMINATION

Section 1052(a) of the Lanham Act is a brazen exercise in viewpoint discrimination. The statute denies trademark registration to marks that meet all the normal requirements for trademark registration, but:

[c]onsist[] of or comprise[] immoral, deceptive, or scandalous matter; or matter which may disparage or falsely suggest a connection with persons, living or dead, institutions, beliefs, or national symbols, or bring them into contempt, or disrepute . . . .

15 U.S.C. § 1052(a). Expression that is “immoral” or “scandalous” or that disparages or brings into contempt or disrepute “persons, living or dead, institutions, beliefs, or national symbols” is normally what freedom of speech is all about. “If there is a bedrock principle underlying the First Amendment, it is that the government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable.” Texas v. Johnson, 491 U.S. 397, 414 (1989). This commitment to freedom of speech protects graphic displays of offensive speech far more intense than the Redskins mark. As the Court explained in upholding First Amendment protections for hatefully disparaging speech of the

Westboro Baptist Church in its calculated attacks on fallen American soldiers callously presented near military funerals:

Speech is powerful. It can stir people to action, move them to tears of both joy and sorrow, and—as it did here—inflict great pain. On the facts before us, we cannot react to that pain by punishing the speaker. As a Nation we have chosen a different course—to protect even hurtful speech on public issues to ensure that we do not stifle public debate. That choice requires that we shield Westboro from tort liability for its picketing in this case.

Snyder v. Phelps, 562 U.S. 443, 460-61 (2011). See also United States v. Stevens, 559 U.S. 460, 471 (2010) (striking down a federal law prohibiting depictions of animal cruelty, such as “crush videos,” observing that First Amendment doctrine does not permit punishment of “any speaker so long as his speech is deemed valueless or unnecessary, or so long as an ad hoc calculus of costs and benefits tilts in a statute’s favor”); United States v. Alvarez, 132 S. Ct. 2537, 2543 (2012) (plurality opinion) (striking down federal law prohibiting false claims of military honors, observing that “[s]tatutes suppressing or restricting speech must be judged by the sometimes inconvenient principles of the First Amendment”).

On its face, § 1052(a) is a paradigmatic example of viewpoint-based legislation. It is precisely what the First Amendment addresses with greatest skepticism.

Consider, for example, the ordinance struck down in R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, Minnesota, 505 U.S. 377 (1992), which read:

Whoever places on public or private property a symbol, object, appellation, characterization or graffiti, including, but not limited to, a burning cross or Nazi swastika, which one knows or has reasonable grounds to know arouses anger, alarm or resentment in others on the basis of race, color, creed, religion or gender commits disorderly conduct and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Id. at 380. The Court held that the “ordinance goes even beyond mere content discrimination, to actual viewpoint discrimination.” Id. at 391.

Section 1052(a) of the Lanham Act engages in the same form of viewpoint discrimination as the law struck down in R.A.V., and for precisely the same reasons. The statute’s sweeping prohibition on marks that disparage “persons, living or dead, institutions, beliefs, or national symbols” is breathtaking, and cannot be distinguished from the R.A.V. ordinance proscribing “anger, alarm or resentment on the basis of race, color, creed, religion, or gender.” So too, the government’s motive in passing § 1052(a) is constitutionally illicit—manifestly grounded in disagreement with the message communicated by the mark.

If there were any doubts about the continued viability of such principles, they should surely be assuaged by the Supreme Court’s recent determination in Reed v. Town of Gilbert, Arizona, that “[c]ontent-based laws—those that target speech based on its communicative content—are presumptively unconstitutional and may be justified only if the government proves that they are narrowly tailored to serve compelling state interests.” 135 S. Ct. 2218, 2226 (2015). In a powerful reminder, the Court in Gilbert emphasized that the strict scrutiny standard is triggered by laws that either discriminate on their face on the basis of content, or that are motivated by a governmental purpose to penalize disfavored views. Id. at 2228-31. Section 1052(a) of the Lanham Act does both, and as in R.A.V., goes beyond mere regulation of content, to discrimination based on viewpoint.

These viewpoint discrimination principles apply to laws that burden speech just as they apply to laws that fully censor it. “Lawmakers may no more silence unwanted speech by burdening its utterance than by censoring its content.” Sorrell v. IMS Health Inc., 131 S. Ct. 2653, 2664 (2011) (citing Simon & Schuster, Inc. v. Members of N.Y. State Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 115 (1991)) (content-based financial burden); Minneapolis Star & Tribune Co. v. Minn. Comm’r of Revenue, 460 U.S. 575 (1983) (speaker-based financial burden); see also Ariz. Free Enter. Club’s Freedom Club PAC v. Bennett, 131 S. Ct. 2806, 2821 (2011) (striking down matching fund provisions that did not directly restrict speech, noting “that does not mean that the matching funds provision does not burden speech”).

Section 1052(a) is plainly unconstitutional unless some alternative First Amendment doctrine is applicable exempting the statute from the normal strictures forbidding viewpoint discrimination. Several have been posited. One argument is that trademark registration is “government speech” and thus outside the provenance of the First Amendment. A second is that trademark registration is a government privilege, not an entitlement, and that what appears to be viewpoint discrimination is merely the government acting to shape the contours of a benefit program. And finally, it may be claimed that the bar on registration of disparaging trademarks is a permissible regulation of commercial speech. None of these arguments, however, are sound.

II. TRADEMARK REGISTRATION IS NOT GOVERNMENT SPEECH

A. Treating Trademark Registration as Government Speech Contradicts the Rationales Underlying the Government Speech Doctrine

The Supreme Court's decisions in Pleasant Grove City, Utah v. Summum, 555 U.S. 460 (2009) and Walker v. Texas Division, Sons of Confederate Veterans, Inc., 135 S. Ct. 2239 (2015) set forth the guiding principles for determining whether expression should be classified as government speech. The Court's observation in Summum is apt here: "There may be situations in which it is difficult to tell whether a government entity is speaking on its own behalf or is providing a forum for private speech, but this case does not present such a situation." Summum, 555 U.S. at 470.

In Summum, the Court recognized "the legitimate concern that the government speech doctrine not be used as a subterfuge for favoring certain private speakers over others based on viewpoint." Id. at 473. This is precisely the subterfuge at work here, as §1052(a) all but hijacks the government speech doctrine to penalize a viewpoint deemed offensive.

The government speech doctrine exists to enable the government to express its own viewpoint as it engages in the process of governance. Under the doctrine, “government statements (and government actions and programs that take the form of speech) do not normally trigger the First Amendment rules designed to protect the marketplace of ideas.” Walker, 135 S. Ct. at 2245-46. The government may also impose viewpoint restrictions on speech made possible by a government program, so long as the program was designed to promote a governmental message. But if the program was enacted to facilitate private speech, the government may not impose viewpoint restrictions on that private speech. Compare Rust v. Sullivan, 500 U.S. 173, 194 (1991) (upholding restrictions on medical providers regarding abortion counseling) with Legal Services Corp. v. Velazquez, 531 U.S. 533, 548-49 (2001) (striking down restrictions on the litigation choices of legal services lawyers). These principles are in large part pragmatic, as it is impossible to imagine how government could operate if its own speech and its own programmatic initiatives were required to be viewpoint neutral. “Were the Free Speech Clause interpreted otherwise, government would not work.” Walker, 135 S. Ct. at 2246.

The government speech doctrine is anchored by the theory that the political process provides a sufficient check on the government's expression. If voters disagree with the speech of the government, as expressed by the officials who comprise it, they may elect different officials. The doctrine thus "in part reflects the fact that it is the democratic electoral process that first and foremost provides a check on government speech." Id. at 2245 (citing Bd. of Regents of Univ. of Wis. Sys. v. Southworth, 529 U.S. 217, 235 (2000)).

None of these rationales apply to a decision by the government to withhold trademark registration for disparaging marks. Such a decision cannot be speech incident to governance, because policing offensive speech in the general marketplace is not within the provenance of the government in the first place. To assume so turns the First Amendment on its head.

While the government speech doctrine is grounded in the notion that the democratic process serves as a check—if citizens don't like the speech of officials uttered in the name of the government they may vote the officials out—the whole point of the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of speech is to insulate expression from the popular will. Most Americans find deeply offensive the desecration of the American flag, see Johnson, 491 U.S. at 414; or the Ku Klux Klan's burning of crosses, see Virginia v. Black, 538 U.S. 343, 367 (2003); Brandenburg

v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 448-49 (1969); or depictions of animal cruelty in “crush videos,” see Stevens, 559 U.S. at 471; or the homophobic protests of the Westboro Baptist Church near military funerals, see Snyder, 562 U.S. at 460-61. Yet the First Amendment takes out of the hands of government the authority to channel those majority sensibilities into law and exercise viewpoint discrimination over such expression. “The very purpose of a Bill of Rights was to withdraw certain subjects from the vicissitudes of political controversy, to place them beyond the reach of majorities and officials and to establish them as legal principles to be applied by the courts.” W. Va. Bd. of Ed. v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 638 (1943).

B. Treating Trademark Registration as Government Speech is Contrary to the Government Speech Doctrines Emanating from Sumnum and *Walker

If it is theoretically incoherent to treat a refusal to grant trademark registration to disparaging marks as government speech, such treatment is also doctrinally unsound. In Sumnum, the government speech consisted of decisions by a city as to what permanent monuments it would display in a city park. 555 U.S. at 470. The Court drew on traditions going back thousands of years to support the notion that the selection of what monuments to include or exclude on government property are quintessentially exercises in expression by the government itself. Id. (“Governments have long used monuments to speak to the public. Since ancient times, kings, emperors, and other rulers have erected statues of themselves to remind their subjects of their authority and power. Triumphal arches, columns, and other monuments have been built to commemorate military victories and sacrifices and other events of civic importance.”).

Building on Summum, the Court in Walker cited numerous reasons for treating the specialty license plate program in Texas as government speech. “First, the history of license plates shows that, insofar as license plates have conveyed more than state names and vehicle identification numbers, they long have communicated messages from the States.” Walker, 135 S. Ct. at 2248. States, the Court observed, “have used license plate slogans to urge action, to promote tourism, and to tout local industries.” Id. Secondly, the Court reasoned, Texas license plate designs were often closely identified in the public mind with the State of Texas, including the facts that the state placed the name “TEXAS” in large letters at the top of every plate, that Texas vehicle owners are required by law to display license plates, and that all Texas license plates are issued by the State. Id. Texas license plates, the Court concluded, are “essentially, government IDs.” Id. at 2249. Moreover, the private person or entity seeking a specialty plate, the Court reasoned, was likely to be intentionally playing on the suggestion that Texas had endorsed the message on the plate. Id. The Court in Walker also heavily emphasized the degree of direct control Texas maintained over the messages conveyed on its specialty plates, citing rules on design and the fact that the DMV “Board must approve every specialty plate design proposal before the design can appear on a Texas plate,” an authority that had been actively exercised. Id.

In contrast, trademark registration, like copyright registration, has not historically been understood in our culture or our law as “government speech,” or to use the parlance of Walker, as “government IDs.” Trademark is a common law right that comes into existence through use by private parties. See In re Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U.S. 82, 92 (1879). “The principle underlying trademark protection is that distinctive marks—words, names, symbols, and the like—can help distinguish a particular artisan’s goods from those of others.” B&B Hardware, Inc. v. Hargis Indus., Inc., 135 S. Ct. 1293, 1299 (2015). As the United States Patent and Trademark Office Trademark Trial and Appeal Board has observed, “[j]ust as the issuance of a trademark registration by this Office does not amount to a government endorsement of the quality of the goods to which the mark is applied, the act of registration is not a government imprimatur or pronouncement that the mark is a ‘good’ one in an aesthetic, or any analogous, sense.” In re Old Glory Condom Corp., 26 U.S.P.Q.2D 1216, at *5 n.3 (T.T.A.B. 1993).

Trademark registration, like trademark itself, is the bestowal of certain legal benefits to private individuals and entities regarding the private expression of those individuals and entities. B&B Hardware, Inc., 135 S. Ct. at 1300. It is understandable that a license plate required by the government to be affixed to a vehicle, bearing the government's name and logo, and serving a government function regarding vehicle registration and law enforcement, is a form of "government speech." The government manufactures plates and has an interest in limiting the number of variants that exist, lest their value as "government IDs" be diluted. No similar interest attaches to the millions of trademarks generated in the private sector. To treat the registration of the millions and millions of private trademarks in the for-profit and non-profit sectors as the government speaking is virtually nonsensical. Such a view of the government speech doctrine would turn any viewpoint-based action by the government denying a benefit to a speaker, from refusal to recognize a student organization to denying a parade permit, into government speech. In the context of trademarks, the government would have carte blanche to use its trademark registration power to pursue any policy on its agenda: it could deny registration to "Coke" and "Pepsi" to discourage soda consumption, to "Budweiser" to discourage drinking beer, or to "Camel" to discourage smoking. Call these actions government speech and the inconvenient First Amendment is out of the picture.

If the Patent and Trademark Office were to publish a press release criticizing the Washington Redskins for continuing to use the Redskins mark, that would be government speech. The denial of trademark registration, however, is not the “government speaking” in any plausible sense but simply the government discriminating against private speech of which it disapproves.

III. DENIAL OF TRADEMARK REGISTRATION IS NOT A LIMITATION ON THE CONFERRAL OF A GOVERNMENT BENEFIT ESSENTIAL TO DEFINING THE CONTOURS OF A GOVERNMENT PROGRAM

The government is not free to attach unconstitutional conditions, such as the surrender of First Amendment rights, to the receipt of government benefits:

For at least a quarter-century, this Court has made clear that even though a person has no “right” to a valuable governmental benefit and even though the government may deny him the benefit for any number of reasons, there are some reasons upon which the government may not rely. It may not deny a benefit to a person on a basis that infringes his constitutionally protected interests – especially, his interest in freedom of speech. For if the government could deny a benefit to a person because of his constitutionally protected speech or associations, his exercise of those freedoms would in effect be penalized and inhibited.

Perry v. Sindermann, 408 U.S. 593, 597 (1972).

The unconstitutional conditions doctrine has often been applied to prevent the government from restricting free speech rights as an incident to bestowing government benefits. See, e.g., Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169 (1972) (striking down a state university’s refusal to grant official student group recognition to the Students for a Democratic Society based on the university’s concerns over SDS positions regarding violent protest); FCC v. League of Women Voters of Cal., 468 U.S. 364 (1984) (striking down a restriction on public broadcasters barring broadcasters from editorializing as a condition of federal funding); Rosenberger v. Rector and Visitors of Univ. of Va., 515 U.S. 819 (1995) (striking down a University of Virginia policy denying funding to student groups who used the funds for religious proselytizing); Legal Servs. Corp. v. Velazquez, 531 U.S. 533 (2001) (striking down restrictions on the advocacy of legal services lawyers); Agency for Int'l Dev. v. Alliance for Open Soc'y Int'l, Inc., 133 S. Ct. 2321, 2328 (2013) (striking down a provision of a federal law requiring recipients of funds to adopt a policy stating that they oppose sex trafficking and prostitution).

An important theme of these cases is that it is no defense for the government to claim that speakers are not directly prevented from speaking. The students in the SDS chapter in Healy were allowed to express their views, they were just denied the benefits of recognition as a student group. Similarly, the students in Rosenberger were not prevented from proselytizing, they were simply barred from participation in the University's funding program for student groups and publications if they engaged in such proselytizing.

It is thus no answer for the District Court to maintain that the Redskins remain free to use their mark and that the public remains free to discuss it. Notwithstanding all the efforts of the United States to minimize the import of trademark registration—i.e. it may, the government shrugs, “at the margin, encourage businesses to identify their goods with marks that satisfy the registration requirement”<sup>1</sup>—trademark registration is of major import, substantial benefits flow from federal registration of the mark, and the unconstitutional conditions cases stand for the proposition that those benefits may not be denied on the basis of viewpoint. As the Supreme Court has recently observed:

Registration is significant. The Lanham Act confers “important legal rights and benefits” on trademark owners who register their marks. . . . Registration, for instance, serves as “constructive notice of the registrant’s claim of ownership” of the mark. It also is “prima facie evidence of the validity of the registered mark and of the registration of the mark, of the owner’s ownership of the mark, and of the owner’s exclusive right to use the registered mark in commerce on or in connection with the goods or services specified in the certificate.” And once a mark has been registered for five years, it can become “incontestable.”

B&B Hardware, Inc., 135 S. Ct. at 1300 (internal citations omitted). In sum, the entire thrust of the unconstitutional conditions doctrine is that government may not deny to citizens the legal protections for their expression that they would otherwise enjoy merely because the government disagrees with the message conveyed by that expression.

The Supreme Court has on a number of occasions permitted government restraints on discriminatory conduct as a condition placed on the receipt of federal benefits. Title IX prohibits university recipients of federal aid from discriminating on the basis of gender. See Grove City Coll. v. Bell, 465 U.S. 555 (1984). The Internal Revenue Service may deny tax exempt status to entities that discriminate on the basis of race. See Bob Jones Univ. v. United States, 461 U.S. 574 (1983). And a state law school may condition student group recognition on adherence to a non-discrimination policy with regard to eligible members. Christian Legal Soc’y Chapter of the Univ. of Cal. v. Martinez, 561 U.S. 661 (2010). The Redskins franchise does not stand accused of discriminatory conduct, in the palpable sense illustrated by Grove City, Bob Jones, or Martinez. Rather, the franchise is being penalized for the perceived offensiveness of its expression alone.

---

<sup>1</sup> United States’ Reply Mem. of Law on 4/14/15 p. 5, Pro-Football, Inc., v. Blackhorse, No. 14-cv-01043 D (E.D. Va. April 14, 2015) ECF No. 127.

Moreover, even when policing discriminatory conduct, the Court has made clear that the First Amendment principles governing viewpoint discrimination still apply. In Martinez, for example, the Court emphasized that no viewpoint discrimination existed, noting that student groups remained free to “express any viewpoint they wish—including a discriminatory one.” Id. at 696 n.26. The Court elaborated that the decision “thus continues this Court’s tradition of ‘protect[ing] the freedom to express “the thought that we hate.””” Id. (internal citations omitted).

Another exception to the unconstitutional conditions doctrine, somewhat less sharply defined, permits the government to direct its limited resources by placing restrictions on government spending programs as an incident to shaping the contours of those programs. This “shaping of spending” exception, however, remains substantially counter-balanced by the larger unconstitutional conditions doctrine. See Alliance, 133 S. Ct. at 2328. “At the same time, however, we have held that the Government ‘may not deny a benefit to a person on a basis that infringes his constitutionally protected . . . freedom of speech even if he has no entitlement to that benefit.’” Id. (quoting Rumsfeld v. Forum for Acad. and Institutional Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47, 59 (2006)). The Court in Alliance harmonized its prior decisions in this arena by emphasizing the critical distinction between limits that define the contours of a program and limits that “seek to leverage funding to regulate speech outside the contours of the program itself.” Alliance, 133 S. Ct. at 2328. To illustrate the difference, the Court contrasted its holding in Rust v. Sullivan, 500 U.S. 173, which upheld a restriction imposed on federal funding of reproductive services banning abortion counseling, and its holding in Regan v. Taxation With Representation of Wash., 461 U.S. 540 (1983), which upheld a federal law forbidding groups seeking nonprofit status from engaging in substantial efforts to influence legislation, with its holding in League of Women Voters, 468 U.S. at 364, which struck down limits on the editorializing of stations receiving public broadcasting.

The Court in Alliance conceded that “the distinction drawn in these cases—between conditions that define the federal program and those that reach outside it—is not always self-evident.” Alliance, 133 S. Ct. at 2330. That there are at times close and difficult cases, however, does not render the Lanham Act's disparaging marks provision a close or difficult case.

Applying this body of law, § 1052(a) is plainly at odds with the First Amendment. Congress has not attempted to impose any limitation on discriminatory conduct. Nor is trademark registration a federal spending program, with § 1052(a) functioning to define the limits of federal largess. An attempt to cast § 1052(a) as a limit on a government spending program, much like the attempt to cast it as government speech, is mere wordplay. "Congress cannot recast a condition on funding as a mere definition of its program in every case, lest the First Amendment be reduced to a simple semantic exercise." Velazquez, 531 U.S. at 547. Rather, § 1052(a) is a classic example of what the doctrine of unconstitutional conditions flatly forbids: using the leverage of the grant or denial of a government benefit to penalize viewpoints the government finds offensive.

IV. SECTION 1052(A) CANNOT BE SUSTAINED AS A VALID REGULATION OF COMMERCIAL SPEECH

The refusal of the Patent and Trademark Office to grant registration to disparaging marks is not a permissible form of regulation of "commercial speech."

Commercial speech jurisprudence is anchored in the Central Hudson test:

At the outset, we must determine whether the expression is protected by the First Amendment. For commercial speech to come within that provision, it at least must concern lawful activity and not be misleading. Next, we ask whether the asserted governmental interest is substantial. If both inquiries yield positive answers, we must determine whether the regulation directly advances the governmental interest asserted, and whether it is not more extensive than is necessary to serve that interest.

Cent. Hudson Gas & Elec. Corp. v. Pub. Serv. Comm'n, 447 U.S. 557, 566 (1980).

Because trademarks are themselves aspects of trade and commerce, a court might be tempted to assume that all regulation of trademarks is regulation of “commercial speech.” Trademarks are, after all, commercial identifiers, the symbols and words by which companies distinguish and identify their brands.

It does not follow, however, that all government regulation of trademarks is properly reviewed under the Central Hudson standard. There is nothing commercial that triggers the § 1052(a) ban on immoral, scandalous, disparaging, or contemptuous material. The statute thus carries embedded within it the concession that some trademarks function both as commercial identifiers and as expressions conveying political, artistic, cultural, or religious meanings—the very meanings that may render them immoral, scandalous, disparaging, or contemptuous. The regulation of those offending aspects of trademarks, including the disparagement restriction invoked to cancel the Redskins registration, is the regulation of a political and social message, nothing more or less.

As this Court has recently noted, “[t]he Lanham Act and First Amendment may be in tension at times, but they are not in conflict so long as the Act hews faithfully to the purposes for which it was enacted.” Radiance Found., Inc. v. NAACP, 786 F.3d 316, 321 (4th Cir. 2015). “The risk of impinging on protected speech is much greater when trademarks serve not to identify goods but rather to obstruct the conveyance of ideas, criticism, comparison, and social commentary.” Id. at 322. Radiance pitted the trademark of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People with a hateful and contemptuous mocking of the trademark, “The National Association for the Abortion of Colored People.” In holding that the Lanham Act was not violated, this Court recognized the dangers to First Amendment values that would inure in allowing the Act to become a vehicle for repressing free expression, declaring that: “[t]rademark law in general and dilution in particular are not proper vehicles for combatting speech with which one does not agree.” Id. Radiance involved an attempt by the holder of a mark to penalize expression which the holder found disparaging. The First Amendment values enforced in Radiance should apply with redoubled force when it is the government penalizing expression it perceives as disparaging. Trademark law ought not be co-opted to operate as a vehicle for the speech police. To advance down this road would be dangerous business. Trademark registration is often granted to groups that exist for associational and expressive purposes. See Jennifer E. Rothman, Commercial Speech, Commercial Use, and the Intellectual Property Quagmire, 101 Va. L. Rev (forthcoming Nov. 2015) (noting the wide range of non-profit groups that have obtained trademark protection, including such provocative registrations as “Dykes on Bikes,” Registration No. 3323803). Across the political and cultural spectrum, such trademarks are often intentionally provocative.

When commercial and noncommercial elements of a message are intertwined, the appropriate constitutional response is to ratchet up the level of constitutional protection, not ratchet down, treating the entirety of the message as protected by the First Amendment’s demanding strict scrutiny standard. Riley v. Nat’l Fed’n of the Blind, 487 U.S. 781, 796 (1988) (“But even assuming, without deciding, that such speech in the abstract is indeed merely ‘commercial,’ we do not believe that the speech retains its commercial character when it is inextricably intertwined with otherwise fully protected speech. . . . Thus, where...the component parts of a single speech are inextricably intertwined...we apply our test for fully protected expression.”) (internal citations omitted); see also Ass’n for Private Sector Colls. & Univs. v. Duncan, 681 F.3d 427, 456 (D.C. Cir. 2012) (“Thus, when the government seeks to restrict inextricably intertwined commercial and noncommercial speech, courts must subject the restriction to the test ‘for fully protected expression.’”); In re Orthopedic Bone Screw Prods. Liab. Litig., 193 F.3d 781, 793 (3rd Cir. 1999) (“Where the commercial and noncommercial elements of speech are ‘inextricably intertwined,’ the court must apply the ‘test for fully protected expression.’”).

On this point, amici commend to this Court the opinion of Justice Breyer, joined by Justice O'Connor, in Nike, Inc. v. Kasky, 539 U.S. 654 (2003), which involved the question of whether Nike's public statements on labor and employment conditions in third-world factories could be regulated as "commercial speech." Because Justice Breyer's opinion is a dissent from the dismissal of a writ of certiorari, it has no binding precedential force, and is offered here only for its persuasive value. Yet that persuasive value is compelling. Justice Breyer in Nike observed that the First Amendment "favors application of the . . . public-speech principle, rather than the . . . commercial-speech principle." Nike, 539 U.S. at 676 (Breyer, J., dissenting). Justice Breyer noted that "the communications at issue are not purely commercial in nature. They are better characterized as involving a mixture of commercial and noncommercial (public-issue-oriented) elements." Id. He then noted that even the least political of the statements at issue in the case involved commercial and noncommercial elements that were "inextricably intertwined." Id. at 677. After examining the form, content, and regulatory regime, Justice Breyer concluded that heightened scrutiny, not commercial speech intermediate scrutiny, should apply. Id. at 678-79.

The government should not be permitted to have it both ways, seeking to regulate only the noncommercial elements of communication, yet invoking the in-intermediate scrutiny standard designed to grant government greater latitude in the regulation of commercial expression.

Even the stripped-down elements of a trademark—its function as an identifier of a company’s identity, goods, or services—is far from invisible to the First Amendment. In Sorrell v. IMS Health Inc., 131 S. Ct. 2653 (2011), the Supreme Court considered “data mining” and “detailing,” practices which assisted pharmaceutical manufacturers in promoting their drugs. The state of Vermont sought to limit this practice, through legislation providing that absent the prescriber’s consent, prescriber-identifying information could not be sold by pharmacies and similar entities. There were certain limited exceptions, such as a carve-out for “health care research.” Vermont argued that Act 80 was not a regulation of speech, but a commercial restriction on trafficking in a “commodity.” The Supreme Court roundly rejected the state’s argument, holding that the law prohibited the sale of information subject to exceptions that were based in large part on the content of a purchaser’s speech. Id. at 2663. The Court in Sorrell observed that the creation of information is protected by the First Amendment, even when that information is devoid of advocacy, and is simply a collection of “facts.” Id. at 2666-67.

The Court in Sorrell suggested (but did not decide) that that the information being disseminated by the data mining firms might well be entitled to the heightened scrutiny applicable to political speech, noting that “[w]hile the burdened speech results from an economic motive, so too does a great deal of vital expression.” Id. at 2665 (citing Bigelow v. Virginia, 421 U.S. 809, 818 (1975); N.Y. Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 266 (1964); United States v. United Foods, Inc., 533 U.S. 405, 410-411 (2001)). In turn, virtually all of the Court’s discussion of the controlling First Amendment principles in Sorrell invoked the classic doctrines forbidding content-based and speaker-based discrimination, doctrines that form the backbone of modern First Amendment doctrines protecting political speech. Id. (“Both on its face and in its practical operation, Vermont’s law imposes a burden based on the content of speech and the identity of the speaker.”). The Court’s more recent ruling in Reed v. Town of Gilbert, Arizona goes still further in this direction, citing Sorrell—a case involving commercial speech—frequently in a case involving non-commercial discourse. 135 S. Ct. 2218, 2227-28, 2235 (2015).

In the end, in Sorrell it did not matter whether the speech was reviewed as political or commercial speech, because the law was unconstitutional under either test. Sorrell, 131 S. Ct. at 2667 (citing Greater New Orleans Broad. Assn., Inc. v. United States, 527 U.S. 173, 184 (1999)) (“As in previous cases, however, the outcome is the same whether a special commercial speech inquiry or a stricter form of judicial scrutiny is applied.”).

As in Sorrell, even if the rules governing regulation of commercial speech were applied, the cancellation of the Redskins mark remains unconstitutional. One of the most powerful themes of modern commercial speech law is that the government may not invoke, as its “substantial interest” justifying regulation, paternalistic manipulation of the marketplace of ideas. “Those who seek to censor or burden free expression often assert that disfavored speech has adverse effects. But the ‘fear that people would make bad decisions if given truthful information’ cannot justify content-based burdens on speech.” Id. at 2670-71 (quoting Thompson v. W. States Med. Ctr., 535 U.S. 357, 374 (2002)). In Carey v. Population Servs. Int’l, the Court rejected the position that commercial speech regulation could be justified by the government’s interest in suppressing offensive expression, noting that it had “consistently held that the fact that protected speech may be offensive to some does not justify its suppression.” 431 U.S. 678, 701 (1977). Elaborating, the Court made the very point being emphasized by amici here:

Appellants suggest no distinction between commercial and noncommercial speech that would render these discredited arguments meritorious when offered to justify prohibitions on commercial speech. On the contrary, such arguments are clearly directed not at any commercial aspect of the prohibited advertising but at the ideas conveyed and form of expression the core of First Amendment values.

Id. at n.28. Similarly, in Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prods. Corp., the Court stated that “we have consistently held that the fact that protected speech may be offensive to some does not justify its suppression,” adding that the Court had “specifically declined to recognize a distinction between commercial and noncommercial speech that would render this interest a sufficient justification for a prohibition of commercial speech.” 463 U.S. 60, 71-72 (1983). The government is disqualified from invoking the false cover of commercial speech regulation to do no more than penalize expression it finds offensive, for such a purpose is per se disqualified as the type of interest that may be invoked to justify regulation.

Finally, even if the paternalistic interest in policing trademarks deemed, immoral, disparaging, scandalous, or contemptuous could qualify as a substantial governmental interest, § 1052(a) would still fail the Central Hudson test, for mere cancellation of the registration of the marks would not prevent them from still being used by their owners, thus accomplishing little, if any, of the government’s paternalistic purpose. Cancellation of marks under § 1052(a) would thus fail the requirement that the regulation at issue “directly and materially advance” the government’s asserted interest. Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525, 555 (2001).

This infirmity once again exposes the fundamental lack of alignment between the government’s purpose and the commercial nature of trademarks. Policing the perceived racial disparagement that resides in the Redskins mark has nothing to do with the commercial nature of trademarks. See Cincinnati v. Discovery Network, Inc., 507 U.S. 410, 424 (1993) (citing Simon & Schuster v. Members of the N.Y. State Crime Victims Bd., 502 U.S. 105, 120 (1991) (distinction drawn by Son of Sam law between income derived from criminal's descriptions of his crime and other sources "has nothing to do with" state's interest in transferring proceeds of crime from criminals to victims)) ("Not only does Cincinnati's categorical ban on commercial news racks place too much importance on the distinction between commercial and noncommercial speech, but in this case, the distinction bears no relationship whatsoever to the particular interests that the city has asserted.").

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth, amici respectfully urge this Court to reverse the decision of the District Court.

November 5, 2015

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Floyd Abrams

FLOYD ABRAMS

CAHILL GORDON & REINDEL LLP

80 PINE STREET

NEW YORK, NEW YORK 10005

(212) 701-3621

(212) 378-2137 (FAX)

fabrams@cahill.com

RODNEY A. SMOLLA

4601 CONCORD PIKE
WILMINGTON, DELAWARE 19803
(302) 477-2278
(302) 477-2282 (FAX)
rods moll a@gmail.com

Counsel for Amici Curiae

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE WITH FED. R. APP. P. 32

Pursuant to Rule 32(a)(7)(C)(i) of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, the foregoing brief is in 14-Point Times New Roman proportional font and contains 6,940 words, excluding the parts of the brief exempted by Rule 32(a)(7)(B)(iii), and thus is in compliance with the 7,000 word limit for amicus briefs in the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure for the Fourth Circuit.

Dated: November 5, 2015

/s/ Floyd Abrams
FLOYD ABRAMS
CAHILL GORDON & REINDEL LLP

Attorney for Amici Curiae

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that, on November 5, 2015, I electronically filed the foregoing with the Clerk of the Court for the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit by using the appellate CM/ECF system. I certify that all participants in the case are registered CM/ECF users and that service will be accomplished by the appellate CM/ECF system

Dated: November 5, 2015

By: /s/ Floyd Abrams
FLOYD ABRAMS
CAHILL GORDON & REINDEL LLP

Attorney for Amici Curiae

APPENDIX*LIST OF AMICI CURIAE LAW PROFESSORS

(Affiliations provided for identification purposes only.)

---

1. Rodney Smolla is the Dean and Professor of Law at Widener University Delaware Law School.
2. Floyd Abrams is a Visiting Lecturer in Law at Yale Law School and a partner in Cahill Gordon & Reindel LLP.
3. Ronald K.L. Collins is the Harold S. Shefelman Scholar at the University of Washington School of Law.
4. Erin Daly is a Professor of Law at Widener University Delaware Law School.
5. Eric M. Freedman is the Siggie B. Wilzig Distinguished Professor of Constitutional Rights at the Maurice A. Deane School of Law at Hofstra University.
6. Alan E. Garfield is a Professor of Law at Widener University Delaware Law School.
7. James Gibson is a Professor of Law at the University of Richmond School of Law.
8. Hugh C. Hansen is a Professor of Law at Fordham Law School.
9. Seth F. Kreimer is the Kenneth W. Gemmill Professor of Law at the University of Pennsylvania Law School.
10. Mark Lemley is the William H. Neukom Professor of Law at Stanford Law School.
11. James R. May is a Distinguished Professor of Law at Widener University Delaware Law School.

12. Mary-Rose Papandrea is a Professor of Law at the University of North Carolina School of Law.
13. Jennifer E. Rothman is a Professor of Law and the Joseph Scott Fellow at Loyola Law School.
14. Suzanna Sherry is the Herman O. Lowenstein Professor of Law at Vanderbilt Law School.
15. Nadine Strossen is the John Marshall Harlan II Professor of Law at New York Law School.
16. William Van Alstyne is the William R. and Thomas L. Perkins Professor Emeritus of Law at the Duke University School of Law and the Lee Professor Emeritus of Law at the Marshall-Wythe Law School at the College of William and Mary.
17. Eugene Volokh is the Gary T. Schwartz Professor of Law at the UCLA School of Law.
18. Timothy Zick is the Miles E. Godwin, Jr. Professor of Law at Marshall-Wythe Law School at the College of William and Mary.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT
APPEARANCE OF COUNSEL FORM

BAR ADMISSION & ECF REGISTRATION: If you have not been admitted to practice before the Fourth Circuit, you must complete and return an Application for Admission before filing this form. If you were admitted to practice under a different name than you are now using, you must include your former name when completing this form so that we can locate you on the attorney roll. Electronic filing by counsel is required in all Fourth Circuit cases. If you have not registered as a Fourth Circuit ECF Filer, please complete the required steps at Register for eFiling.

THE CLERK WILL ENTER MY APPEARANCE IN APPEAL NO. _____ as

[ ]Retained [ ]Court-appointed(CJA) [ ]Court-assigned(non-CJA) [ ]Federal Defender [ ]Pro Bono [ ]Government

COUNSEL FOR: _____

_____ as the (partly name)

appellant(s) appellee(s) petitioner(s) respondent(s) amicus curiae intervenor(s)

_____
(signature)

_____
Name (printed or typed)

_____
Voice Phone

_____
Firm Name (if applicable)

_____
Fax Number

_____
Address

_____
E-mail address (print or type)

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I certify that on _____ the foregoing document was served on all parties or their counsel of record through the CM/ECF system if they are registered users or, if they are not, by serving a true and correct copy at the addresses listed below:

_____
Signature

_____
Date