Legal Studies
Research Paper Series

Research Paper No. 05 - 10

The Supreme Court’s Indian Problem

Matthew L.M. Fletcher

This paper can be downloaded without charge from the Social Science Research Network Electronic Paper Collection at:
http://ssrn.com/abstract=xxxxxx
THE SUPREME COURT’S INDIAN PROBLEM

Matthew L.M. Fletcher
Michigan State University College of Law

Abstract

This year, while accepting the “Rule of Law” award from the American Bar Association, Justice Breyer proclaimed that our constitutional system “floats on a sea of public acceptance.” At that time, Breyer’s statements were meant to highlight his expectation that the Court will decide its cases following the “rule of law.”

However, Breyer’s statement, while demonstrative of his faith in the rule of law, does not always ring true. In fact, as I argue, the Supreme Court often decides its cases by ignoring, rather than following, the rule of law. This problem is particularly acute in the body of federal Indian law—which has cast a disastrous shadow on tribal interests. Tribes have lost about three-quarters of their cases before the Supreme Court since 1988. Yet, curiously, prior to 1988, tribal interests won slightly more than half of their cases. What changed?

In this Article, I attempt to answer this question. Justice Scalia’s pithy comment last Term that some matters are more “likely to arouse the judicial libido” offers a clue. I argue that the Court’s reasons for granting certiorari and for deciding against tribal interests in these cases are not consistent with the rule of law. In fact, I will show that the Court identifies important, unrelated constitutional concerns that arise often in Indian law cases – issues with which they and their clerks are familiar – and then decides those matters. Only afterward, and mostly as an afterthought, does the Court then turn to the federal Indian law questions. The Court’s federal Indian law analysis takes a secondary and often inferior role.

The result of this obfuscation is an unrelenting assault on tribal interests before the Court—and the rule of law more generally. In this Article, I offer the first in-depth empirical assessment of the Supreme Court’s recent Indian law decisions and argue in favor of a sweeping change in the means of analyzing Indian law. Instead of focusing on the Indian law questions, this Article shows how major Indian law cases were decided on other grounds to significant tribal disadvantage. Analyzing federal Indian law in this manner makes transparent the Court’s frightening disrespect for the rule of law.
THE SUPREME COURT’S INDIAN PROBLEM

Matthew L.M. Fletcher∗

“[These] matters [are] more likely to arouse the judicial libido—voting rights, antidiscrimination laws, or environmental protection, to name a few….”

– Justice Scalia

“[T]he Supreme Court sort of makes it up as they go along.”

– Judge Roger L. Wollman, Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, on Indian law

“This constitutional system floats on a sea of public acceptance.”

– Justice Breyer

What “arouse[s] the judicial libido”? Federalism? Race? The environment? The exclusionary rule? How about federal Indian law? How can that be? Who understands Indian law? Who wants to? Why would the Supreme Court ever want to hear Indian law cases in a discretionary docket? But they do – an average of two cases per year since 1953 and on occasion as many as five cases in a single Term, a proportion far higher than some other kinds of cases that attract Justice Scalia’s “judicial libido.”

∗ Associate Professor, Michigan State University College of Law. J.D., University of Michigan Law School. Enrolled Member, Grand Traverse Band of Ottawa and Chippewa Indians. Chi-miigwetch to Todd Aagaard, Larry Catá Backer, Jeannine Bell, Kirsten Carlson, Kristen Carpenter, Richard Delgado, Margareth Etienne, Zeke Fletcher, Kate Fort, Phil Frickey, Luis Fuentes-Rohwer, Ian Gershengorn, Sam Hirsch, Brian Kalt, Riyaz Kanji, Sonia Katyal, John Petoskey, Angela Riley, Wenona Singel, Joe Singer, Alex Skibine, and Kevin Washburn.

4 Zuni Public School Dist. No. 89, 127 S. Ct. at 1556 (Scalia, J., dissenting).

Judge Wollman’s humorous and off-the-cuff remark during oral argument in an Indian law case a few years back epitomizes an area of law that is often confusing, unpredictable, and prone to obfuscation. But it is here in federal Indian law where the rule of law championed by members of the Supreme Court is under constant assault – and stands as a harbinger of what may be coming in other areas that attract the judicial or the academy’s or mass media’s attention. Perhaps one way to explain what is going on is to imagine the Indian cases in a new way.

This Article asserts a new theory about why and how the Supreme Court accepts and decides its Indian law docket: the Court identifies an important constitutional concern embedded in a run-of-the-mill Indian law cert. petition, grants cert., and then applies its decision making discretion to decide the “important” constitutional concern. Once that portion of the Indian law case is decided, the Court decides any remaining federal Indian law questions in order to reach a result consistent with its decision on the important constitutional concern. From the view of a national decision-maker such as a Supreme Court Justice, there is much more to a simple Indian law case than a dispute between Indians, Indian tribes, and the non-Indian individuals, governments, and entities that oppose them. There are questions of equal protection and due process, federalism, jurisdiction, Congressional and Executive branch power, and more. Indian law disputes often are mere vessels for the Court to tackle larger questions; often these questions have little to do with federal Indian law. And, since Indian law is not as grounded in the Constitution as the other questions, it is more malleable, prone to inconsistencies and unpredictability.

Perhaps as a result of this modern view of the law, federal Indian law as practiced before the Supreme Court is in serious normative decline – and most likely began to degenerate around the time of the ascension of Chief Justice Rehnquist in 1986 and the concomitant trend toward reducing the Supreme Court’s docket. By “serious normative decline,” I mean a general reduction in Indian law cases decided on the basis of established precedent, an increase in cases decided without a guiding legal theory, and an increase in cases that appear to be decided on the basis of the gut reaction of the Justices. And, as a corollary, much of the federal Indian law understood as deriving from cases about Indians – cases that explored and defined the rights and responsibilities of tribes and individual Indians, cases that could not have existed but for some unique legal characteristic that only the presence of a tribal interest brought out – is not really about Indians, tribes, or Indian law. What scholars and practitioners should do is look at federal Indian law through a lens of assuming that the cases have nothing to do with Indians or Indian tribes. Federal Indian law as the modern Supreme Court reads and understands it begins to make more sense that way.

This Article attempts a fresh look at the Court’s Indian cases from more of a “positive rather than a normative analysis…”

This Article’s goal is to give “systematic attention to … implications for Supreme Court decisionmaking” in the context of federal Indian law. The argument begins with a description of two classic Indian law cases in Part I. These cases represent a vital and dynamic part of Indian law – forming a part of the core of the Indian law canon – but they can be read as something other than an Indian law case. In fact, these cases, while decided in reliance on Indian law principles, includes separate, independent reasons – related to constitutional or pragmatic policymaking – for the outcome.

Part II introduces the current state of federal Indian law. The Court makes decisions in the Indian law field not through reliance upon a rule of law or even through much reliance on precedent, but instead with reliance upon its view of the way things “ought to be,” as Justice Scalia once wrote in an internal memorandum. The Court’s decisions now reflect a “ruthless pragmatism” as a result of this view of Indian law.

Part III offers a fresh view of several of the Court’s most important modern era Indian cases by placing the Court’s Indian caseload in the context of its larger trends. The most obvious trend is the severe decline in the Court’s cases, the lowest number in over a half-century. See Linda Greenhouse, In Steps Big and Small, Supreme Court Moved Right, N.Y. TIMES, July 1, 2007, at A1.

12 Philip P. Frickey, (Native) American Exceptionalism in Federal Public Law, 119 HARV. L. REV. 431, 460 (2005); see also id. at 436 (“ruthless pragmatism”).
docket. The decline in the caseload should mean that most of the Court’s Indian cases are decided in order to resolve a split in authority in the lower and state courts. But those splits in authority account for few cases. Other Indian law cases appear to reach the Court because they raise or involve questions of important constitutional concern for the Court. It is a possibility that the declining docket means that the Court will hear fewer and fewer (if any) cases on their Indian law-related merits, but instead choose Indian law cases because they present an opportunity to opine on an important constitutional concern outside of Indian law.

Part III also offers a new look at several important Indian law cases from the last few decades, describing how these particular cases make more sense if they are viewed not from a federal Indian law lens, but from the point of the view of the Court and its big picture take on constitutional law. Cases often considered core Indian law cases like Morton v. Mancari, Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association, and Minnesota v. Mille Lacs Band of Chippewa Indians, include a powerful undercurrent of non-Indian law, an undercurrent that perhaps included issues more salient to the Court’s Members than tribal sovereignty or Indian rights.

Part IV recommends that observers of federal Indian law begin to highlight the “important” constitutional questions that may arise in future Indian law cases. This Article does not recommend abandoning the quest for normative analyses and conclusions about Indian law, but instead recommends incorporating a positive aspect to the analysis. Part IV concludes by applying the template to several cases rising through the federal court system that the Court may agree to hear in the coming years. If nothing else, identification of the important constitutional concerns involved in these cases will aid tribal advocates in predicting the relative chances of success before the Court.

Where observers go wrong, this Article asserts, is by ignoring the Supreme Court’s broader agenda, an agenda driven by its receding docket. This Article asserts that the Supreme Court grants petitions for writ of certiorari not because the Court wants to decide tribal interests or even to put Indians in their place. The Court does not care what happens in Indian Country. To assume the Court does care is unwarranted; there is no evidence whatsoever to suggest that the Court (as a whole) is invested in the concerns and issues in Indian Country, which is as far from the minds of the elite legal establishment as any issue can be.

What does interest the Court are constitutional questions of Congressional and Executive power; broader federalism issues unrelated to the place of Indian tribes in the federalism scheme; the legitimacy, sanctity, and authority of federal courts; and larger issues related to race and social issues. There is significant evidence to support these assertions. These areas are now the significant areas of constitutional concern that attracts the Court’s attention. The fact that these constitutional concerns arise in Indian Country – both in modern times and throughout the Court’s history – often is accidental. But these issues do appear to arise in Indian Country on a consistent basis. That federal Indian law principles do not answer these broader questions is a significant reason why the Court deviates from Indian law principles and even appears to denigrate them. When tribal advocates recognize these broader constitutional concerns in advance of a certiorari petition, then the advocacy before the Court on behalf of tribal interests will improve, as will the win rate for tribal advocates.

To be fair to tribal advocates, in at least one recent case, counsel for tribal interests did make an attempt to bring forth to the Court pragmatic reasons outside the realm of federal Indian law justifying a decision in favor of tribal interests. This attempt failed and for explainable reasons, but future litigants should use the strategy as a template in future cases.

I. A New Theory of Supreme Court Indian Law Decisionmaking

Consider the following fact patterns:

- A court of the State of Georgia convicts an Indian man of murder and sentences him to death. The crime took place outside the jurisdiction of the state – on an Indian reservation. The defendant appeals to federal courts, seeking a writ of habeas corpus. The United States Supreme Court grants the petition and issues an order staying the execution. The State of Georgia then executes the man two days later. The Georgia legislature then passes a resolution asserting that the United States Supreme Court does not possess authority to review the decisions of Georgia state courts. The Court then hears a second criminal case raising concomitant issues relating to the Georgia

---

18 See Georgia v. Tassels, 1 Dud. 229 (Ga. 1930).
legislature’s repeated attempts to nullify treaties and other federal law. 19

- An Indian woman sues an Indian tribe in federal court seeking a declaration that a tribal membership ordinance is a violation of the equal protection clause of the Indian Civil Rights Act. 20 The Supreme Court grants certiorari. 21

The previous fact patterns are simplified versions of two foundational federal Indian law cases. With the exception of the first part of the first fact pattern (a case made moot by the state), the parties to the cases argued and briefed the cases as though they were Indian law cases. Scholars who have critiqued and analyzed the cases have treated them as Indian law cases and these cases appear in prominent fashion in the two major casebooks on federal Indian law. 22 These two cases are classic cases that form a part of the backbone of federal Indian law.

But it could be argued that neither of these cases are federal Indian law cases.

These cases highlight the possibility that perhaps it is a mistake to think of many of the cases that form the canon of modern Indian law as Indian law cases. In the last twenty years under the Rehnquist Court, for example, it is harder and harder to find Indian law Supreme Court decisions relying upon foundational principles of Indian law, especially those rooted in the Constitution. Such a conclusion should not be so surprising. Prominent constitutional law scholars suggest that there is no such thing as principled constitutional interpretation. For example, Professor Jed Rubenfeld wrote:

In constitutional law … there are no such overarching interpretive precepts or protocols. There are no official interpretive rules at all. In any given case raising an undecided constitutional question, nothing in any current constitutional law stops a judge from relying on original intent, if the judge wishes. But nothing stops a judge from ignoring original intent, if a judge wishes. Or suppose a plaintiff comes to court asserting an unwritten constitutional right. Under current case law, judges are fully authorized to dismiss the right because the Constitution says nothing about it. Another admissible option, however, is to uphold the right on nontextual grounds. Evolving American values? Judges can consult them or have nothing to do with them.\(^{23}\)

Indian law scholars have been decrying the lack of principled decisionmaking about federal Indian law for decades.\(^{24}\) Nothing stops the Court – no constitutional provision, common law principle, or anything else – from working radical transformations of federal Indian law at any moment.\(^{25}\) The only constitutional provision mentioning Indian tribes is the Indian Commerce Clause.\(^{26}\) As with the rest of constitutional interpretation, there are no rules, except one – the Court looks for the familiar, a constitutional concern that attracts its attention.\(^{27}\)

The first fact pattern, based on \textit{Georgia v. Tassels}\(^{28}\) and \textit{Worcester v. Georgia},\(^{29}\) involved questions of federalism and the supremacy of federal law \(^{26}\) Const. art. I, § 8, cl. 3. For more discussion of the background and possible limits of federal power under the Indian Commerce Clause, please see United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 224-26 (2004) (Thomas, J., concurring); Akhil Reed Amar, America’s Constitution: A Biography 107-08 (2005); Milner S. Ball, Constitution, Court, Indian Tribes, 1987 Am. B. Foundation Research J. 1; Clinton, There is No Supremacy Clause, supra note __; Saikrishna Prakash, Against Tribal Fungibility, 89 Cornell L. Rev. 1069 (2004).

\(^{27}\) Cf. Lawrence Lessig, How I Lost the Big One, Legal Aff., March/April 2004, at 57, 59.

over conflicting state laws. In that case, the State of Georgia issued a resolution proclaiming that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction or authority to review the decisions of state courts. The case arose in the larger national debate now known as the Nullification Crisis, where several Southern states argued that they had the authority to nullify federal statutes. Chief Justice Marshall believed these issues would arise in the 1832 Term in the form of a case involving the Second Bank of the United States, a critical focal point of the states’ rights debate, or the various attempts by states to declare the unconstitutionality of (or nullify) federal law. Instead, these issues appeared 30 See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 559 (“The constitution, by declaring treaties already made, as well as those to be made, to be the supreme law of the land, has adopted and sanctioned the previous treaties with the Indian nations, and consequently admits their rank among those powers who are capable of making treaties.”); id. at 561 (“[Georgia’s laws] interfere forcibly with the relations established between the United States and the Cherokee nation, the regulation of which, according to the settled principles of our constitution, are committed exclusively to the government of the union.”); Currie, supra note __, at 181-83; Burke, supra note __, at 512-13; Gerald N. Magliocca, The Cherokee Removal and the Fourteenth Amendment, 53 Duke L. J. 875, 905-06 (2003).

31 See 1 Warren, supra note __, at 733-34.

33 See David Loth, Chief Justice: John Marshall and the Growth of the Republic 357 (1949) (“To Marshall, the tariff issue seemed more dangerous to his principles. For the South . . . was not professing itself willing to obey any protective tariff law.”); id. at 356 (quoting letter to his son; “This session of Congress is indeed particularly interesting. The discussion on the tariff and on the Bank, especially, will, I believe call forth an unusual display of talents.”); see also Richard P. Longaker, Andrew Jackson and the Judiciary, 71 in a case arising out of Indian Country. All the necessary elements of the other cases were present for the Court to announce that federal law was supreme over conflicting state law, the underlying important constitutional concern.

The second fact pattern, probably the most famous, controversial, and important opinion favoring tribal interests issued in the last 100 years – Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez 34 – could be construed as a mere statutory interpretation case about whether the Indian Civil Rights Act may be read to imply a cause of action 35 and to waive the sovereign immunity of a sovereign. 36 It is tempting to focus on the tribal sovereignty aspects of the case – and they are significant – but consider the underlying questions that could have been more salient to the Court: whether sovereign immunity is waived where a civil rights statute does not have a specific cause of action to enforce those rights and, perhaps, whether the Court’s nascent sex discrimination jurisprudence ought to be extended or reconsidered. Consider that if the Court construed the Act as implying a cause of action and waiving tribal sovereign immunity, the reasoning of such a precedent could be used against both federal and state sovereigns.

And these cases are not exceptions. It is a distinct possibility that there are fewer federal Indian law cases decided on the basis of federal Indian law principles over the course of the history of federal Indian law than one would expect. Of course, while those cases do appear to rely upon federal Indian law principles, what is becoming clearer to Indian law scholars and tribal advocates with each passing Term is that Court no longer applies a principled federal Indian law. In the last years of the Rehnquist Court, the tendency began to appear as an acute trend.

Practitioners and observers of Indian law should begin to recognize that the Supreme Court’s priorities in granting certiorari and deciding Indian law cases might not be related to Indians at all. It appears their priorities are, in order, important constitutional concerns and pragmatic effects of the 34 436 U.S. 49 (1978). For often intense commentary about the decision, see for example

CATHARINE MACKINNON, FEMINISM UNMODIFIED: DISCOURSES ON LIFE AND LAW 63-69
(1987); Judith Resnik, Dependent Sovereigns: Indian Tribes, States, and the Federal Courts, 56 U. CHI. L. REV. 671 (1989); Angela P. Harris, Race and Essentialism in Feminist Legal Martinez: Twenty Five Years of Disparate Cultural Visions, 14 KAN. J. L. & PUB. POL’Y 49
(2004-2005). For the point of view of a Santa Clara Pueblo woman, please see Rina Swentzell, Testimony of a Santa Clara Pueblo Woman, 14 KAN. J. L. & PUB. POL’Y 97 (2004-2005).
35 See Martinez, 436 U.S. at 60-61 (citing Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66 (1975)).
36 See id. at 58-59.
outcome. As the above historical cases highlight and as other recent cases discussed in Part III below demonstrate, federal Indian law as a consistent and logical legal doctrine is not a priority for the Rehnquist/Roberts Courts.

II. The Deplorable State of Federal Indian Law

The story begins with the wretched state of federal Indian law. Dean David Getches reported in 2001 that tribal interests have lost over 70 percent of cases before the Court for the fifteen Terms preceding his article and over 80 percent of cases in the ten Terms preceding his article. One case upon which Dean Getches focused – Strate v. A-1 Contractors – turned much of federal Indian law on its head. And that was before the 2000 Term in which tribal interests won one and lost three cases, two of which were nothing short of devastating to tribal interests. These two cases, Nevada v. Hicks and Atkinson Trading v. Shirley, shocked observers of federal Indian law in both the results and the “ruthless[ness]” of their reasoning. If there was any doubt about the Court’s sympathies in relation to tribal interests, the 2001 Term resolved those doubts with great clarity – tribal interests would find no quarter in the Supreme Court. Others, such as Professor Alex Skibine, note that the Court has decided 48 cases since 1988 following California v. Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, with 33 of the cases going against the tribal interests and four being neutral.

---

42 See Joseph William Singer, Symposium Foreword: Indian Nations and the Law, 41 TULSA L. REV. 1, 3 (2005) (“In an era when many people support a ‘restrained’ judiciary willing to defer to Congress on the basis of ‘strict construction’ of both statutes and constitutional text, it is frustrating to find a Supreme Court that supposedly adheres to that philosophy, yet is so willing to ignore precedent and the text of the United States Constitution, federal treaties, and statutes in the interest of providing equitable treatment to non-Indian interests, while showing a fundamental misunderstanding of both the history of the United States’ relations with Indian nations and the basic principles of federal Indian law.”).
The scholarship in the field of federal Indian law focuses on three foundational principles: (1) Indian affairs are the exclusive province of the federal government;45 (2) state authority does not extend into Indian Country;46 and (3) Indian tribes retain significant inherent sovereign authority unless extinguished by Congress.47 These foundational principles no longer (if they ever did) drive the Court’s federal Indian law. The large majority of Indian law scholars have concluded that the recent federal Indian law cases – in which tribal interests win perhaps one-quarter of the time, less than convicted criminals48 – are an abomination, a derogation of tribal sovereignty and Indian interests, and the worst form of judicial activism and assertions of judicial supremacy.49 Most observers of federal Indian law cases reach the conclusion that – in the words of an Eighth Circuit judge who was reversed by the Court in a major Indian law case50 – the Supreme Court makes up Indian law as it goes.51 Legal commentators struggle to reach a conclusion as to what drives the Supreme Court’s recent Indian law jurisprudence, with some commentators asserting that the Rehnquist Court’s “federalism revolution” in favor of states’ rights has seeped into federal Indian law.52 Others assert that 45 COHEN’S HANDBOOK 2005 ED., supra note __, at 2 (“[T]he federal government has broad powers and responsibilities in Indian affairs.”) (emphasis omitted).

46 Id. (“[S]tate authority in Indian affairs is limited.”) (emphasis omitted).
47 Id. (“[A]n Indian nation possesses in the first instance all of the powers of a sovereign state.”) (emphasis omitted).
48 See David H. Getches, Beyond Indian Law: The Rehnquist Court’s Pursuit of States’ Rights, Colorblind Justice and Mainstream Values, 86 MINN. L. REV. 267, 280-81 (2001) (“Tribal interests have lost about 77% of all the Indian cases decided by the Rehnquist Court in its fifteen terms, and 82% of the cases decided by the Supreme Court in the last ten terms. This dismal track record stands in contrast to the record tribal interests chalked up in the Burger years, when they won 58% of their Supreme Court cases. It would be difficult to find a field of law or a type of litigant that fares worse than Indians do in the Rehnquist Court. Convicted criminals achieved reversals in 36% of all cases that reached the Supreme Court in the same period, compared to the tribes’ 23% success rate.”) (footnotes omitted).
50 United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193 (2004), rev’g, 324 F.3d 635 (8th Cir. 2003) (en banc).
52 E.g., Getches, Beyond Indian Law, supra note __, at 320-21, 329-30, 344; John P. LaVelle, Sanctioning a Tyranny: The Diminishment of Ex parte Young, Expansion of Hans the Court disfavors minority rights and follows an “anti-anti-discrimination” pattern.\(^\text{53}\) Others argue that the Supreme Court is engaged in a pattern of race discrimination against tribal interests.\(^\text{54}\) Some assert that the Court’s Indian law jurisprudence is based on knee-jerk reactions against the notion of a third type of sovereign government existing within the United States.\(^\text{55}\) Still other commentators argue that the foundational principles of federal Indian law are so based in racism and stereotype as to have tainted all modern Indian law decisions.\(^\text{56}\) Another vein of commentary deprecates the inefficiencies resulting from the Court’s apparent ad hoc decision making in the field.\(^\text{57}\) There is no shortage of criticism of the Court’s apparent deviation from the foundational principles of federal Indian law and of an apparent deviation from the Court’s role of protecting the Nation’s minorities from the injustices perpetrated by federal, state, and local governments.\(^\text{58}\)

---

\(^{54}\) E.g., Getches, Beyond Indian Law, supra note __, at 318-20. For an argument that the Court follows an “anti-anti-discrimination agenda,” see RUBENFELD, REVOLUTION BY JUDICIARY, supra note __, at 158-83.

An additional factor that makes these cases difficult for tribal advocates and Indian law scholars to stomach is the consistent high rate at which the Supreme Court grants petitions for writ of certiorari in cases featuring Indian tribes, tribal organizations, and Indian interests. Since the advent of the “modern era” of federal Indian law in 1959, few Terms of the Court have passed without at least one major decision featuring tribal interests. Many Terms feature several cases, in some as many as five. Even as Chief Justices Rehnquist and Roberts lead a Court that hears a smaller and smaller docket, tribal interests continue to be decided before the Court at the same proportional rate. Coupling this fact with the low win rate for tribal interests has compelled tribal advocates to avoid appearing before the Court at all. A great victory for Indian Country in the 21st century consists of convincing the Court not to grant certiorari.

Since the 2000 Term, the Court has decided several other cases against tribal interests. Three are of import for purposes of this Article – Inyo County v. Bishop Paiute, Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation v. Wagnon, and, perhaps the most important and destabilizing decision in modern federal Indian law, City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation. These cases exemplify the very recent degradation of the foundations of federal Indian law by the 61 Compare The Statistics, 119 Harv. L. Rev. 415, 426 (2005) (noting that the Court decided 80 cases in the 2004 Term), with Leading Cases, 100 Harv. L. Rev. 100, 304 (1986) (noting that the Court decided 159 cases in the 1986 Term); see also Posner, supra note __, at 35 (“The number of decisions reviewable by the Court is growing; the number of decisions reviewed by the Court is declining.”); Greenhouse, In Steps Big and Small, supra note __, at A1 (reporting that the Court decided 69 cases in the October 2006 Term, the lowest number since 1953).

---

60 See supra note __.
Supreme Court, but they are mere extensions of a longer trend that can be traced back to the appointment of Justice Rehnquist to the Court in 1971 and his elevation to Chief Justice in 1986. While as Chief Justice, he did not write the lead opinions in many Indian law decisions, the doctrinal origins of these cases can be traced back to the damage done by then-Justice Rehnquist in the 1970s and early 1980s to foundational principles of federal Indian law.

Then-Justice Rehnquist’s Indian law jurisprudence stretches back to Moe v. Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Indian Reservation. In that case, Justice Rehnquist rewrote the presumptions and the analytic framework to which the Court had been faithful since the beginning of the modern era, Williams v. Lee. Justice Rehnquist’s Indian law cases reversed presumptions in favor of tribal immunities to state regulation and taxation; replaced bright-line rules favoring tribal interests with balancing tests favoring states and local governments; eliminated tribal criminal jurisdiction over nonmembers; eviscerated tribal civil jurisdiction over nonmembers; and limited both the federal trust responsibility toward Indian tribes and the canons of construing Indian treaties and statutes to the benefit of Indians and Indian tribes. Then-Justice Rehnquist’s efforts in this new Indian law jurisprudence did not appear to provide a reasonable theory for the decisions or the departures from the hallowed foundational principles of federal Indian law. Unfortunately, his attitude about Indians and Indian peoples perhaps can be summed up in his solitary and pithy dissent in United States v. Sioux Nation, where he accused the majority of engaging in “revisionist history” by asserting that the Sioux Indians were backstabbing savages.

---

68 See generally Barsh & Henderson, supra note __, at 192-95; Williams, Like A Loaded Weapon, supra note __, at 97-113; Johnson & Martinis, supra note __.
71 E.g., Moe, 425 U.S. at 475-83.
72 E.g., id.
77 448 U.S. 371, 424 (1980) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting); Williams, Like A Loaded Weapon, supra note __, at 118-22.
78 Sioux Nation, 448 U.S. at 435 (Rehnquist, J., dissenting); id. at 437 (quoting Samuel Eliot Morison, The Oxford History of the American People 539-40 (1965)).
These cases formed a base that have made the Court’s federal Indian law decisions since the ascension of Chief Justice Rehnquist easy cases for the Court, with many of the most damaging cases being unanimous decisions. While some may now question the Rehnquist Court’s success in its so-called “federalism revolution” and other areas where it rolled back the jurisprudence of the Warren Court, there is a strong argument that the Rehnquist Court did accomplish one very clear task – killing federal Indian law.

This Part offers a description of federal Indian law as it once was and how it is now after the end of the Rehnquist Court. These are two very different eras of federal Indian law.

A. Foundational Principles of Federal Indian Law

The true foundation of all of federal Indian law includes the treaties executed by Indian tribes and the federal government, alongside the thousands of Acts of Congress relating to Indians and Indian tribes and thousands of federal regulations promulgated by federal agencies administering American Indian policy. In 1941, Felix and Lucy Cohen collected the entire body of treaties, statutes, and regulations and reduced them into one massive comprehensive treatise – the Handbook of Federal Indian Law, published by the United States Department of Interior. The Handbook remains today the standard-bearer for the collection of federal statutory and treaty law applicable to Indians and Indian tribes, but it also remains the clearest source of the general principles and specific rules of federal Indian law. The Handbook and its successors (with one notable exception) constitute one of the most successful treatises in American law.

---

82 FELIX S. COHEN, HANDBOOK OF FEDERAL INDIAN LAW (1942) (hereinafter COHEN, HANDBOOK 1942 ED.); see also Lucy Kramer Cohen, Felix Cohen and the Adoption of the IRA, in INDIAN SELF-_RULE: FIRST-HAND ACCOUNTS OF INDIAN-WHITE RELATIONS FROM ROOSEVELT TO REAGAN 70, 70-72 (Kenneth R. Philp, ed. 1986).

83 The 1958 edition was the product of Termination Era Department of Justice attorneys to revise the Handbook — often without new or additional precedent — to reach conclusions opposite to (or limiting) the original conclusions favoring tribal sovereignty and Indian rights. See Vine Deloria, Jr., Book Review, 54 U. COLO. L. REV. 121, 123-24 (1982) (reviewing
So much of federal Indian law is the federal law announced by the Supreme Court. Much of the basis for federal Indian law derives from what Charles Wilkinson called the Marshall Trilogy of cases—Johnson v. M’Intosh, Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, and Worcester v. Georgia. Chief Justice Marshall’s majority opinions in Johnson and Worcester, alongside his lead opinion in Cherokee Nation, both declared several critical and longstanding common law principles regarding the relationship between the federal government, states, and Indian tribes and provided a template for analyzing and interpreting the law in relation to disputes between the three sovereigns. The holdings of the cases, while significant, nonetheless are secondary to the reasoning of the cases, as Justice Baldwin asserted in his Cherokee Nation concurrence.

Johnson famously adopted the Doctrine of Discovery as the foundation for land titles in the United States. The Court held that Indian tribes did not own the land upon which they lived and used, but instead the European nations and their American successors acquired fee simple title in the land by virtue of discovering the land. The Court announced that Indian...

84 The original edition (1942) has been cited by state and federal courts upwards of 200 times; the 1982 edition has been cited over 400 times; and the 2005 edition has already been cited several times by federal and state courts. The disgraced (disgraceful) 1958 edition was cited over 100 times; however, many of these citations were to non-controversial portions of the Handbook.

85 See Charles K. Burdick, The Law of the American Constitution: Its Origin and Development § 107, at 313 (1922) (“These [constitutional provisions] leave untouched the general field of constitutional power to deal with Indian affairs, and it has been necessary for the Supreme Court to build up here a very considerable body of unwritten constitutional law.”; citing the Indian Commerce Clause and the Indians Not Taxed Clauses).

87 21 U.S. 543 (1823).

88 30 U.S. 1 (1831).

89 31 U.S. 515 (1832).

91 Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 32 (Baldwin, J., concurring).

93 Johnson, 21 U.S. at 574. For background on whether the Doctrine of Discovery did confer fee title or a mere preemption right prior to Johnson, please compare Robert J. Miller, Native America, Discovered and Conquered: Thomas Jefferson, Lewis and... tribes did have the right of possession and use, a right that could be extinguished only by the federal government through purchase or conquest.\footnote{Johnson, 21 U.S. at 574.}

the federal government. Johnson recognized that history plays an important role in contextualizing Indian cases.

The second case in the Trilogy, Cherokee Nation, held that Indian tribes were not “foreign nations” as used in the Constitution for purposes of the Court’s original jurisdiction. The opinion held that Indian tribes did retain aspects of nationality and created the label “domestic dependent nations” for Indian tribes, a label that sticks today. The holding itself is very narrow, with Chief Justice Marshall’s opinion being curt and somewhat conclusory. Only one other Justice joined his lead opinion. Critical to the holding was the conclusion that Indian tribes are “dependent” on the United States, a conclusion reached through an interpretation of the Cherokee Nation’s treaties where they consented to be “dependent” upon the United States for military protection. Two Justices wrote stinging concurrences arguing that Indians and Indian tribes were too degraded and insignificant to meet the international law definition of “nation” at all and agreeing that Indian tribes were dependent. Justice Thompson, joined by Justice Story, later added a dissent that argued for finding that Indian tribes such as the Cherokee Nation are foreign nations, whether understood to be so by the Founders or not. Applying international law principles, the dissent argued that the Cherokee Nation did not lose its status as a foreign nation by virtue of agreeing to be dependent on the United States for military protection any more than (using more contemporary analogs) Monaco or the Vatican loses its status as a nation by virtue of their military dependence on their host countries.

The final piece of the Trilogy is Worcester, where Chief Justice Marshall’s opinion garnered a 5-1 majority holding that the laws of the State of Georgia do not extend into Indian Country where they conflict with federal 100 See Fletcher, The Iron Cold, supra note __, at 677-81.

101 30 U.S. 1 (1831).
102 Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 20.
103 Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 17.
104 See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 15-20; Fletcher, The Iron Cold, supra note __, at 639-42.
105 See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 17-18; Fletcher, The Iron Cold, supra note __, at 649-54.
106 See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 20 (Johnson, J., concurring); id. at 31 (Baldwin, J., concurring).
107 See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 50 (Thompson, J., dissenting).
108 See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 53 (Thompson, J., dissenting).
109 31 U.S. 515 (1832).
laws or Indian treaties. Worcester laid the framework for analyzing disputes involving Indian tribes by looking first and foremost to Indian treaties\(^\text{110}\) and then Acts of Congress.\(^\text{111}\) The opinion departed from Cherokee Nation’s labeling of Indian tribes as “domestic dependent nations” and adopted the reasoning of the dissenter in Cherokee Nation, dropping the label “domestic dependent nation” in favor of “distinct, independent political communities.”\(^\text{112}\) Of course, Chief Justice Marshall retired a few years later and no later opinion adopted this phrase or extended the reasoning. In the last few decades, the Court almost never cites Worcester for any proposition other than the undisputed tenet that tribes retain some sovereignty.\(^\text{113}\) In the Court’s phrasing, it has long ago departed from the “platonic notion” that state law has no force in Indian Country.\(^\text{114}\)

Critical foundational principles of federal Indian law originated with the Trilogy. First, Indian tribes and individual Indians did not own their traditional and aboriginal territories in fee simple – the United States did.\(^\text{115}\) Second, federal authority in the field of Indian affairs is both plenary (by virtue of Indian dependency) and exclusive (by virtue of federal constitutional supremacy).\(^\text{116}\) Third, Indian tribes are nations and retain their sovereign \(^{110}\) See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 547 (interpreting the treaty term, “protection”); id. at 553-54 (interpreting the treaty term, “manage all their affairs”).

\(^{112}\) Worcester, 31 U.S. at 557-58.

\(^{115}\) See Johnson, 21 U.S. at 574.

\(^{116}\) See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 557-58, 561.
authority except as limited by the federal government.\textsuperscript{117} Other less significant but important questions originated in the Trilogy as well. For one, the Court held that Indian treaties must be interpreted as the Indians would have understood them.\textsuperscript{118} While the Court is not always faithful to this canon of construction – even in the Trilogy\textsuperscript{119} – the rule is an important part of federal Indian law and even extends to the interpretation of statutes enacted for the benefit of Indians or Indian tribes.\textsuperscript{120} For another, the Court’s conclusions about tribal dependency and weakness provided the theoretical basis for the special relationship between Indian tribes and the federal government, a relationship often referred to as a trust relationship.\textsuperscript{121} According to the Court, tribal dependency requires the government to treat Indians and tribes with special fairness and consideration.\textsuperscript{122} While the Court often refused to condemn federal government actions that appeared to violate this special trust relationship,\textsuperscript{123} the concept remains an important part of federal Indian law and federal Indian policy to this day.\textsuperscript{124}

\textbf{B. The Erosion of the Foundation}

Much like the Contracts Clause jurisprudence of the Marshall Court,\textsuperscript{125} the Marshall Court’s Indian law jurisprudence has eroded over time, although it took a much longer time. The Court’s decisions of the past 20 years, in particular, have been at odds with the foundational principles as articulated by the Marshall Court, but the Court has not gone so far as to \textsuperscript{117} See \textit{Cherokee Nation}, 30 U.S. at 15-20; \textit{COHEN, HANDBOOK} 1942 ED., \textit{supra} note __, at 122.

\textsuperscript{118} See \textit{Worcester}, 31 U.S. at 546-47.

\textsuperscript{119} See \textit{Cherokee Nation}, 30 U.S. at 17-18 (interpreting the treaty term “protection” to the detriment of the Cherokee Nation).

\textsuperscript{120} See \textit{COHEN’S HANDBOOK} 2005 ED., \textit{supra} note __, § 2.02, at 119-128. \textit{But cf.} Chickasaw Nation v. United States, 534 U.S. 84, 95 (2001) (“Nor can one say that the pro-Indian canon is inevitably stronger—particularly where the interpretation of a congressional statute rather than an Indian treaty is at issue.”).

\textsuperscript{121} See \textit{COHEN’S HANDBOOK} 2005 ED., \textit{supra} note __, § 5.04[4], at 418-23.

\textsuperscript{122} \textit{E.g.}, United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 384 (1886).

\textsuperscript{123} \textit{E.g.}, Tee-Hit-Ton Indians v. United States, 348 U.S. 272 (1955) (refusing to require the United States to pay just compensation for taking of tribal property); Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U.S. 553 (1903) (allowing Congress to unilaterally abrogate Indian treaty).

\textsuperscript{124} See \textit{COHEN’S HANDBOOK} 2005 ED., \textit{supra} note __, § 5.04[4][a], at 419 (“Today the trust doctrine is one of the cornerstones of Indian law.”).

overrule any of the cases in the Trilogy. In fact, as some scholars suggest, the Court appears to take the easy way out by simply ignoring those foundational cases. This recent jurisprudence appears sloppy, leading some scholars to suggest that the Rehnquist Court was laden with animus toward Indians and tribes. As the Court itself sometimes recognizes, its decisions in the field are contradictory or even schizophrenic. The Court appears very uncomfortable and suspicious of Indian tribes because the Constitution does not incorporate them into Our Federalism and, as a result, the Court’s supervisory power over tribal courts is very limited. The Court also appears very uncomfortable with federal plenary and exclusive power over Indian affairs where the single provision in the Constitution that authorizes federal control only relates to commerce with Indian tribes. Perhaps most 127 Cf. Getches, Conquering the Cultural Frontier, supra note __, at 1594, 1654.

128 See generally Williams, Like a Loaded Weapon, supra note __, at 131-33 (arguing that at least some the Court’s Members are “adverse racists,” persons who make racist decisions without ever admitting or even acknowledging their racism).

129 Cf. United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193, 219 (2004) (Thomas, J., concurring). See generally Robert Laurence, Don’t Think of a Hippopotamus: An Essay on First-Year Contracts, Earthquake Prediction, Gun Control in Baghdad, The Indian Civil Rights Act, The Clean Water Act, and Justice Thomas’s Separate Opinion in United States v. Lara, 40 TULSA L. REV. 137, 148 (2004) (“It is my opinion, of course, that it is possible to hold two contradictory thoughts in one’s mind at one time, and that the complexity of the law requires it. Of course, American Indian law is schizophrenic. So is the Clean Water Act. So is the common law of contracts. So is the war in Iraq.”); Skibine, The Court’s Use of the Implicit Divestiture Doctrine, supra note __, at 267 (“With two hundred years worth of un-discarded baggage, and antiquated and often contradictory theories, the Supreme Court’s current jurisprudence in the field of federal Indian law has mystified both academics and practitioners.”).

131 See, e.g., National Farmers Union Ins. Cos v. Crow Tribe, 471 U.S. 845 (1985) (holding that a federal court may have jurisdiction over tribal court cases but only to the extent necessary to decide tribal court jurisdiction); Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49 (1978) (holding that the Indian Civil Rights Act did not create a cause of action in federal courts except in criminal cases).

importantly, as Professor Phil Frickey argues, the Court is uncomfortable with being unable to reconcile federal Indian law with the rest of its constitutional jurisprudence.

One can make a reasonable argument that the Court’s decisions in the field from 1832’s Worcester v. Georgia until 1959’s Williams v. Lee amounted to little more than an interregnum where the Court announced very little federal Indian law. That period could be best be characterized as a period in which an incredible, rich, and devastating history of federal Indian policy landed on Indian people while the Court stood by and watched like the house by the side of the road (as Ernie Harwell would say), citing to the political question doctrine whenever a difficult Indian law question arose.

But Williams offered a dramatic interruption of that period in a short opinion by Justice Black that recognized the exclusive authority of tribal courts to adjudicate matters arising out of Indian Country. The holding in Williams was consistent with the Trilogy’s foundational principles that state law did not extend into Indian Country and that Indian tribes retain aspects of sovereignty not expressly divested by Congress. The result helped to vitalize the development of tribal courts and tribal governments, a development that continues today at an impressive rate.

In the first part of the modern era from 1959 to about 1986, a time I have called the “permissive modern era,” tribal interests were victorious.

---

133 See generally Frickey, (Native) American Exceptionalism, supra note __.

134 See COHEN’S HANDBOOK 2005 ED., supra note __, §§ 1.03[4]-1.06, at 45-96 (describing federal Indian policy from 1815 to 1961).

138 Cf. FRANK POMMERSHEIM, BRAID OF FEATHERS: AMERICAN INDIAN LAW AND CONTEMPORARY TRIBAL LIFE 91 (1995) (noting that tribes have “an enduring responsibility to provide a local forum for adjudication of cases”).

before the Court in a large majority of cases. Professor Alex Skibine estimated recently that tribal interests won just under 60 percent of their cases before the Court during this time.\footnote{See Skibine, Teaching Indian Law in an Anti-Tribal Era, supra note __, at 781.} While there were significant losses later in the period, such as Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe,\footnote{435 U.S. 191 (1978).} Montana v. United States,\footnote{450 U.S. 455 (1981).} and Washington v. Colville Confederated Tribes\footnote{447 U.S. 134 (1980).} (all of which were driven by Justice Rehnquist), the Court abided by the Trilogy’s foundational principles in large measure. The Court’s decisions in the area of taxation – cases such as Central Machinery v. Arizona Tax Commission\footnote{448 U.S. 160 (1980).} and Merrion v. Jicarilla Apache Tribe\footnote{455 U.S. 130 (1982).} – recognized the general rule of tribal immunity from state taxation and recognized the inherent sovereign authority of Indian tribes to tax those within their jurisdictions. United States v. Wheeler\footnote{435 U.S. 313, 323-24 (1978).} cemented tribal criminal jurisdiction over tribal members in Indian Country.\footnote{Wheeler, 435 U.S. at 323.} That case also reaffirmed that tribal governments are separate sovereigns.\footnote{471 U.S. 845, 857 & n. 25 (1985) (citing tribal court cases).} And Justice Marshall’s decision in National Farmers Union Ins. Cos. in 1985 provided a framework for the eventual recognition of tribal court judgments in federal court.\footnote{471 U.S. at 857 n. 25 (1985) (citing tribal court cases).}

Several surprising, even disturbing, lines of cases followed the ascension of Chief Justice Rehnquist in 1986. A superficial review of these decisions is helpful for now.

First, the Court began to reinterpret its 1981 decision, Montana v. United States,\footnote{450 U.S. 455 (1981).} to expand its meaning far beyond the very narrow fact situation presented in that case.\footnote{450 U.S. 455 (1981).} The Court’s decisions in Brendale v. Confederated Tribes and Bands of the Yakima Indian Reservation\footnote{492 U.S. 408 (1989).} and South Dakota v. Bourland\footnote{508 U.S. 679 (1993).} served to rewrite the relationship between Indian tribes and nonmembers located within their territorial jurisdiction by adopting a presumption that Indian tribes do not have jurisdiction over nonmembers. This is the opposite of the meaning of the Worcester case. For some commentators (and the Court), Montana is now the foundational case for the current Court, overruling by implication the Worcester decision. The Court now treats Montana as the criminal jurisdiction parallel to Oliphant, creating the expectation that, sometime in the near future, the Court will adopt a bright-line rule eliminating civil jurisdiction over nonmembers, just as it adopted a bright-line rule in Oliphant eliminating criminal jurisdiction over nonmembers.

\footnote{See Judith V. Royster, Montana at the Crossroads, 38 CONN. L. REV. 631, 631 (2006) (describing efforts of Justice Souter to expand the Montana general rule).}

A concomitant result of the expansion of Montana is the deterioration of the adjudicatory jurisdiction of tribal courts that the Court is willing to recognize. In Strate v. A-1 Contractors, perhaps the most damaging case of all the Rehnquist Court's Indian law decisions, the Court called Montana the "pathmarking" case in the field and sharply limited the exceptions to the Montana rule – the so-called Montana 1 and Montana 2 exceptions. Tribal advocates had presumed that the Court would invoke the Montana 2 exception in cases where the clear focus of the case was in Indian Country, but instead the Strate Court all but defined the exceptions out of existence. The Court's decision in Strate came close to being the case that adopted a bright-line rule eliminating tribal civil jurisdiction over nonmembers, but the Court's decision in Nevada v. Hicks case even closer, with Justice Souter's concurring opinion providing an argument that tribal law is "unusually difficult for an outsider to sort out" as justification for adopting the bright-line rule.

\[\text{\textsuperscript{154}}\text{ See John P. LaVelle, Implicit Divestiture Reconsidered: Outtakes from the Cohen's Handbook Cutting Room Floor, 38 CONN. L. REV. 731, 744-47 (2006); Royster, supra note \textsuperscript{155}, at 636-37; Skibine, The Court's Use of Implicit Divestiture, supra note \textsuperscript{160}, at 298.}\]

\[\text{\textsuperscript{155}}\text{ E.g., Daan Braveman, Tribal Sovereignty: Them and Us, 82 OR. L. REV. 75, 86-87 (2003); Singer, Canons of Conquest, supra note \textsuperscript{161}, at 652. See generally Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 U.S. 438, 445 (1997) (designating Montana as the "pathmarking" case).}\]

\[\text{\textsuperscript{156}}\text{ This is the "open question" as designated by Justice Scalia in Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353, 358 n. 2 (2001).}\]

\[\text{\textsuperscript{157}}\text{ Strate, 520 U.S. at 445.}\]

\[\text{\textsuperscript{159}}\text{ See Strate, 520 U.S. at 456-59; LaVelle, Outtakes, supra note \textsuperscript{161}, at 755-59.}\]

\[\text{\textsuperscript{161}}\text{ See Brief of Petitioners 8-11, Strate v. A-1 Contractors, 520 U.S. 438 (2001) (No. 95-1872).}\]

\[\text{\textsuperscript{162}}\text{ 533 U.S. 353 (2001).}\]

\[\text{\textsuperscript{163}}\text{ Hicks, 533 U.S. at 384-85 (Souter, J., concurring).}\]
Second, in Duro v. Reina, the Court attempted to expand its prohibition on tribal criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians, which it had already done in Oliphant, by holding that tribes cannot have criminal jurisdiction over nonmember Indians. Congress quickly enacted the “Duro Fix,” but the doctrinal damage had been done. Oliphant was the first case to utilize the doctrine of implicit divestiture since the Trilogy. Each time the Court finds that an area of tribal sovereign authority has been implicitly divested adds an amount of legitimacy to the doctrine by piling precedent on top of creaky precedent. Ironically, one could argue that the “Duro Fix” itself served to codify the practice, leaving the Court to believe that Congress acquiesces in the judicial divestiture of tribal government authority unless it enacts legislation to reverse the decisions.

Third, the Court declaring some Indian reservations disestablished, such as in South Dakota v. Yankton Sioux Tribe, or diminished, as in Hagen v. Utah, and redefining the term “Indian Country” by making the astounding declaration that there was no Indian Country in Alaska in Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie. Part and parcel of these cases was the severe devaluation of the canons of construction for Indian treaties and statutes.

Fourth, the Court’s Indian taxation jurisprudence, based in part on a balancing test developed in part by then-Justice Rehnquist in *Moe v.

---

167 Duro, 495 U.S. at 688.
169 See United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 326 (1978) (listing three areas in which the Court recognized implicit divestiture: “The areas in which such implicit divestiture of sovereignty has been held to have occurred are those involving the relations between an Indian tribe and nonmembers of the tribe. Thus, Indian tribes can no longer freely alienate to non-Indians the land they occupy. [Johnson.] They cannot enter into direct commercial or governmental relations with foreign nations. [Worcester; Cherokee Nation.] And, as we have recently held, they cannot try nonmembers in tribal courts. [Oliphant.]” (other citations omitted).
173 See, e.g., Hagen, 510 U.S. at 424 (Blackmun, J., dissenting) (“Although the majority purports to apply these canons in principle, ... it ignores them in practice, resolving every ambiguity in the statutory language, legislative history, and surrounding circumstances in favor of the State and imputing to Congress, where no clear evidence of congressional intent exists, an intent to diminish the Uintah Valley Reservation.”).
Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes, became a muddled mess as the Court, from the point of view of tribal interests, interpreted any factor as against the tribal interests. In this area, the Court looks carefully for hints that tribal interests are “marketing the exemption,” Whenever the Court sniffs this intent, the tribal interests do not succeed.

Fifth, the Court held in City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation that equitable defenses applied in cases where Indian tribes or the United States made claims related to historical treaty rights or land dispossession. Since that decision, and a lower court decision dismissing long-standing and powerful Indian land claims in New York state, many Indian treaty claims may be subject to dismissal on the basis of equitable defenses. With one casual opinion in a tax case, the Court may have changed the entire face of federal Indian law, adopting a rule that it had been rejecting on a consistent basis for several decades.

In short, the last 20 years has seen the Rehnquist Court go out of its way to roll back federal Indian law jurisprudence, a new jurisprudence that benefits states, local governments, and private property owners that come into contact with tribal interests.

III. Revisiting the Indian Cases

This Article offers an argument that perhaps it is now time to recognize that the field of federal Indian law as argued before the Supreme Court is dead (but not necessarily in lower federal courts, state or tribal courts, and in other venues). Traditional scholarship and advocacy has failed to persuade the Court that its Indian cases should be decided in a different way. Perhaps at one time, the Court agreed to hear Indian cases on their own merits, but with the Court’s shrinking docket, that might no longer be the case. This Article proposes to look at the Indian law decisions of the Rehnquist Court (and now the Roberts Court) with an eye toward finding broader constitutional and pragmatic concerns that interest the Court.

E.g., County of Oneida v. Oneida Indian Nation, 470 U.S. 226, 253 n. 27 (1985).
A. The Shrinking Supreme Court Docket

Chief Justice Rehnquist’s leadership was almost without precedent in the history of the Supreme Court. There can be no serious doubt that he brought a great deal of stability and legitimacy to a Court shaken by the erratic leadership of Chief Justice Burger. One of the salient features of the Rehnquist Court was the decline in the Court’s docket. In the final Term of the Burger Court, the Court heard and decided 159 cases. By the end of the Rehnquist Court, the Court heard and decided only about 80 cases in the 2004 Term.

The Court’s smaller docket is loaded with cases required to resolve a split in authority between jurisdictions, part of its oversight power over federal courts, and a few significant constitutional law cases that attract the Court’s interest. According to Judge Posner, there tends to be one kind of case the Court now hears – “rule-imposing decisions” in which the Court attempts to “tidy up a field by announcing a crisp rule or standard.” Professor Schauer argues in turn that, while the Court’s ability to decide cases as it chooses remains viable, the Court’s actual “agenda” (if it can be called that) was far from “the public’s major issues of concern [and] the nation’s first-order policy decisions….” While at one time, Judge Posner posits, when the lower courts decided fewer cases, the Court could serve in a supervisory position over the lower courts, the Court “has long emphasized that it is not in the business of correcting the errors of lower courts…. Of course, these analyses beg the question – why does the Court grant certiorari in the cases it does?

Most commentators and studies suggest that an important constitutional concern drives the Court to vote to grant certiorari in many cases. Professors George and Solimine’s study of the Court’s decisions to 180 See Leading Cases, 100 HARV. L. REV. 100, 311 (1986).

---

183 Posner, supra note __, at 37 (citing Roper v. Simmons, 125 S. Ct. 1183 (2005), and United States v. Booker, 125 S. Ct. 738 (2005)).
184 Schauer, supra note __, at 32.
185 See Posner, supra note __, at 35.
186 Id. at 37.

---
grant certiorari in cases decided by the federal courts of appeals sitting en banc affirmed their hypothesis that a conservative Supreme Court is more likely to hear liberal civil rights decisions by lower courts.\textsuperscript{188} Another study hypothesized and then concluded that “[b]ecause Congress cannot easily override constitutional decisions, the authors hypothesize that the justices will accept a higher proportion of constitutional cases, as opposed to statutory ones.....”\textsuperscript{189} The same commentators believed that “[i]n the agenda-setting context, [the Court’s] strategizing would take the form of opting out of a statutory mode and into a constitutional one, either by (1) rejecting a petition that requires her to interpret a federal act, in favor of one that raises constitutional questions; or (2) focusing on constitutional claims contained in a petition, rather than on those of a statutory nature.”\textsuperscript{190} Moreover, the Court may be in a position to “create constitutional rules that are extraordinary difficult, if not impossible, for Congress to override” because of its certiorari power.\textsuperscript{191}

What this seems to suggest is that the Court likely is not going to accept an appeal on an Indian law matter unless there is a circuit split.\textsuperscript{192} It would seem that federal Indian law on its own does not rise to the level of importance or significance – as defined by legal and political elites – to justify taking up space on the Court’s docket. Even before the Rehnquist Court began to limit the Court’s docket, the Justices famously denigrated the importance (to them) of the Indian cases.\textsuperscript{193} Moreover, the unusual character of the Indian \textsuperscript{188} See George & Solimine, supra note __, at 198 (“And our finding that the conservative Rehnquist Court was much more likely to review liberal circuit rulings is consistent with the attitudinal model and with the strategic account of high court agenda-setting.”).

\textsuperscript{189} Epstein, Segal & Victor, supra note __, at 395.

\textsuperscript{190} Epstein, Segal & Victor, supra note __, at 408 (citing Kevin T. McGuire & Barbara Palmer, Issue Fluidity of the U.S. Supreme Court, 89 AM. POL. SCI. REV. 691 (1995); S. Sidney Ulmer, Issue Fluidity in the U.S. Supreme Court: A Conceptual Analysis, in SUPREME COURT ACTIVISM AND RESTRAINT 322 (Stephen D. Halpern & Charles M. Lamb eds., 1982)).

\textsuperscript{191} Epstein, Segal & Victor, supra note __, at 430.

\textsuperscript{193} Bob Woodward & Scott Armstrong, The Brethren: Inside the Supreme Court 57-58 (1979) (reporting that Justice Harlan referred to Tooahnippah v. Hickel, 397 U.S. 598 (1970), as a “peewee” case); id. at 359 (reporting that Justice Brennan referred to United States v. Antoine, 420 U.S. 194 (1977), as a “chickenshit” case); Perry, supra note __, at 262 (quoting a Supreme Court Justice: “The junior justices always gets the crud. As a junior justice, I had my share of Indian cases.”); Neil M. Richards, The Supreme Court cases – generating a significant amount of confusion amongst those who are not experienced in the field – would seem to compel the Court to stay away. Finally, with Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice O’Connor having been replaced by Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Alito, the personal interest in Indian law of those departed “Westerners” would seem to portend a further decline in Indian law certiorari grants. In relative terms, these cases are rare and affect few people. Only about a quarter of law schools even offer Indian Law as a class. A limited number of law professors know enough about Indian law to be able to discuss the issues in the field with any competence. Every Indian lawyer has an anecdote about a law professor dismissing an Indian law case as being the exception to the rule not worth discussing.

Justice’s “Boring” Cases, 4 GREEN BAG 2d 401, 403 (2001) (quoting Justice Brennan’s view of Antoine). But cf. PERRY, supra note __, at 262 (quoting a Supreme Court Justice: “Actually, I think the Indian cases are kind of fascinating. It goes into history and you learn about it, and the way we abused some of the Indians, we, that is the U.S. government….”) (ellipses in original).

The words of one former Supreme Court clerk could tend to imply this theory:

As a former Supreme Court law clerk, allow me to speculate on what would have happened had Justice Souter asked his law clerks for help in finding out about tribal courts. (I do not know if he asked this question.) When I was a clerk, in 1979-80, our best research tools were the excellent research librarians of the Supreme Court library. If asked by my justice, Thurgood Marshall, to find out all I could about tribal courts—a subject about which I knew nothing—I would have turned over the inquiry to one of them. In a few days, I would have received whatever she or he could locate in the Supreme Court library, the Library of Congress, and wherever else materials could be found. There is no way even to guess what those materials would include. Today, a quarter-century after I was a law clerk, one would speculate that the clerks would also take advantage of computer-assisted research. For example, it would seem likely that they would search for “tribal court” using one or more Internet search engines. And it would be beyond the scope of anyone’s imagination what might result from such searches. The task of separating the small amount of wheat from the vast array of chaff would initially fall upon the clerks, who would almost certainly have no expertise to bring to bear.

See PERRY, supra note __, at 261 (“And from a Westerner [Supreme Court Justice]: ‘We now have three Westerners and we are very concerned about Western water rights and Indian cases.’”) (referencing Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Kennedy and O’Connor).

And yet the Court always accepts more Indian cases for review than the field would appear to justify given the Court’s limited interest in Indian affairs.\(^{198}\) Perhaps this is explained by the fact that the Supreme Court’s opportunity to make law as a matter of common law exists only in admiralty law and federal Indian law.\(^{199}\) If the Court’s current caseload of about 80 cases holds in the Roberts Court, then if the Court accepts two Indian law cases a year,\(^{200}\) 2.5 percent of its docket will continue to be Indian law-related. In the 2006 Term, the Court decided two cases involving tribal interests.\(^{201}\) What attracts the Court to federal Indian law?

B. Broader Constitutional Concerns at Play

While the Court will grant certiorari to resolve circuit splits, those cases do not cover the entirety of the Court’s Indian law caseload.\(^{202}\) This Article argues that most Indian law cases reach the Court because there is a constitutional issue embedded in the case that attracts the Court’s attention. This Article will refer to these issues as “constitutional concerns.” This Article argues that while the Court may decide concomitant federal Indian law issues as part of the overall decision, the constitutional concern is what drives the Court, not the Indian law questions. As a result, because the constitutional concern is far more important to the Court than the Indian law questions, the \(^{198}\) See, e.g., Getches, Beyond Indian Law, supra note __, at 292-93 & n. 109 (“From 1958 to 2000, about 2.4% (121 of 4853 cases) of the Court’s total decisions on the merits were Indian cases. In the Rehnquist Court (1986-2000 Terms), about 2.7% (41 of 1510 cases) of the decisions have been in Indian cases. The average number of Indian cases decided has dropped in recent years, but the percentage of Indian cases has remained the same because the overall number of cases decided by the Court has fallen drastically.”) (citations omitted).

---

\(^{199}\) See LAWRENCE H. TRIBE, AMERICAN CONSTITUTIONAL LAW § 3-23, at 157 (2nd ed. 1988) (noting that the Constitution authorizes the Court to make federal common law where “the usual federalism concerns are not relevant,” such as admiralty). Thanks to Joe Singer for raising this point.

\(^{200}\) From 1953 to 2000, the Court decided an average of 1.9 Indian law cases a year. See BAIRD, supra note __, at 104.

\(^{202}\) For example, several Indian law cases in recent Terms did not reach the Court because of a split in authority, but for some other reason. See Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005); City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation, 544 U.S. 197 (2005); Inyo County, Cal. v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Indian Community of the Bishop Colony, 538 U.S. 701 (2003); Nevada v. Hicks, 533 U.S. 353 (2001); Idaho v. United States, 533 U.S. 262 (2001); Atkinson Trading Co., Inc. v. Shirley, 532 U.S. 645 (2001); Rice v. Cayetano, 528 U.S. 495 (2000). Two other cases, Dept. of Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Assn., 532 U.S. 1 (2001), and South Florida Water Management Dist. v. Miccosukee Tribe of Indians, 541 U.S. 95 (2004), while not an Indian law cases per se, involved tribal interests and could be included in this listing.
All things must start at the beginning, so we first turn to the Marshall Trilogy. Consider Worcester v. Georgia, the critical foundational case of federal Indian law described at the beginning of this Article. Justice Breyer has spoken recently about this case. Although Justice Breyer is one of few 203 Frickey, (Native) American Exceptionalism, supra note __, at 460; see also id. at 436 (“ruthless pragmatism”).

204 31 U.S. 5154 (1832).

Consider an important case—one that is often forgotten in courses on constitutional law—from 1832 called Worcester v. Georgia. There was a tribe of Indians, the Cherokees, who, under a treaty with the United States, had land in northern Georgia. Now, this tribe had given up hunting and fishing for better or for worse. They were farmers, they had an alphabet, they even had a constitution. Unfortunately for them they found gold. I say unfortunately because the Georgians then took the land. They simply marched in and took it over. They paid no attention to the treaty. They did pay attention to the gold.

Now as I said this particular tribe of Indians was pretty civilized. So what did they do? They did what any civilized American would do; they hired a lawyer. The lawyer was the best lawyer of his day, Willard Wirt, former Attorney General of the United States, and he said, “We are going to bring a lawsuit and we are going to fight it all the way to the Supreme Court.” In fact, they brought two.

In the first, called Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, they simply sued Georgia, and the Supreme Court eventually found a reason not to hear it. The Court said this is a matter beyond our capability. But then the Georgians passed a law making it a crime to go on the Indian Reservation without the permission of the Georgia legislature. Some missionaries did go on the reservation. A missionary called Worcester was arrested. He was in jail and he brought a lawsuit, in habeas corpus or the equivalent, and said, “I cannot be held here because this land belongs to the Indians, not the Georgians, so Georgia law does not apply.” There was no way for the Supreme Court to avoid that. Here is a person, he is held in prison, he says I am not held correctly under the law because there is no law of Georgia that applies, and he asks the Court to order his release. After a lot of procedural detail, which I will spare you, he got to the Court and the Court decided the case. The Court held that he was right, the land belonged to the Indians. In Justices to have visited Indian Country to become more aware of the conditions on the ground, \(^{206}\) it is doubtful that he incorporated Worcester into his public speeches for that reason. Worcester is not an Indian law case. Before hearing Worcester, the State of Georgia had defied a Supreme Court order staying the execution of a Cherokee man by the State for murder – they executed the man almost as soon as they received the order staying the execution. \(^{207}\) Strong circumstantial evidence supports the notion that the Court must have had Georgia’s defiance in mind when they decided

The first thing the Georgia legislature did was pass a law that said anyone who comes to Georgia to enforce this ruling of the Supreme Court will be hanged. Andrew Jackson, President of the United States, supposedly said (and he said enough such things that it is probably true): “John Marshall, the Chief Justice, has made his decision. Now let him enforce it.” Nobody did a thing.

But then North Carolina, thinking this rather a good idea, said, “We will not give the United States customs duties that we owe them because we prefer to keep them.” Andrew Jackson woke up to the problem and he ended up saying to the governor of Georgia, “You must release Worcester.” They had a negotiation and Worcester was let out of jail.

But what about the land—the land that the Supreme Court of the United States had said belongs to the Cherokees, not to the Georgians? The President sent troops to Georgia. But did he send them to enforce the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States? No. He sent troops to evict the Indians. They walked along what is historically known as the Trail of Tears, to Oklahoma, where their descendants live to this day.

In Worcester, Georgia had convicted four missionaries, and sentenced them to several years of hard labor, for violating a state law that prohibited white men from setting foot in Cherokee Nation territory. The law, part of a whole series of laws aimed at destroying the Cherokee Nation as a viable political presence in Georgia, violated federal treaties between the federal government and the Cherokee Nation. The case had powerful implications for federal Indian law, but those concerns were secondary to the broader constitutional concerns of the supremacy of federal law over conflicting state law and the question of the enforceability of Supreme Court mandates.

Compare Worcester to the previous case in the Marshall trilogy, decided only a year before, Cherokee Nation v. Georgia. In that case, one Member of the Court argued that Indians were worthless savages and Indian tribes were not viable political entities. Another Justice, following Chief Justice Marshall’s lead opinion, voted on narrower grounds but agreed that Indians and Indian tribes were weak and dependent. The Marshall Court was badly fractured over the case, a function of the declining influence of the aging Chief Justice and the increasing hostility toward federal authority from the newer appointees to the Court. But a year later, because of the powerful and dangerous potential of the State of Georgia’s defiance of federal law in Worcester, the Court issued a dramatic reversal of its position on tribal interests. That reversal did not derive from a newfound appreciation of the plight of the Cherokee Nation at all. Perhaps that reversal happened because the Court began to understand the implications of state defiance of federal law that was beginning to happen in the South. Indian law scholars and advocates

---

211 See Worcester, 31 U.S. at 560.
212 30 U.S. 1 (1831).
213 See Cherokee Nation, 30 U.S. at 25 (Johnson, J.) (referring to the Cherokee Nation as a “petty kraal of Indians”).
214 Id. at 40 (Baldwin, J., concurring).
take from Worcester that the Court had affirmed the separate character of tribal sovereignty and the exclusion of state law from Indian Country, but perhaps the bigger question was whether state legislatures could override federal law.\textsuperscript{217}

A more acute pattern – with the Court responding to broader constitutional concerns in its Indian cases – corresponds to some extent with the appointment of Justice Rehnquist to the Supreme Court in 1972.\textsuperscript{218}

Many, if not most, Indian law cases arise out of disputes between Indian tribes and states, with taxation,\textsuperscript{219} regulatory jurisdiction,\textsuperscript{220} economic development,\textsuperscript{221} and the increasing encroachment of state authority within Indian Country\textsuperscript{222} being the primary sources of antipathy. However, the Court often never reaches the merits, declaring that it has no jurisdiction because the state sovereign has not waived its sovereign immunity from suit, a result it has reached three times in the last two decades. The Court has also held in several cases that Indian tribes possess equivalent immunity from suit.

\textsuperscript{221} E.g., Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. 676; County of Yakima, 502 U.S. 251; Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, 480 U.S. 202.

In this line of cases, the Court’s primary constitutional concern is not tribal sovereignty or Indian rights, but clarity in its Eleventh Amendment jurisprudence. The Rehnquist Court articulated a very robust sovereign immunity for states and placed the foundation of that immunity in the Eleventh Amendment. But neither the text of the Constitution nor the Eleventh Amendment offer express authority for state sovereign immunity, forcing the Court to rely upon the history of the Eleventh Amendment’s ratification and even extratextual, preconstitutional notions of state sovereignty principles. The Court’s reasoning in these cases may have contributed to its cases holding that Indian tribes also possess a robust sovereign immunity.

Each of the three cases discussed here involved critical questions of federal Indian law for which the Supreme Court refused to allow an answer by disclaiming the jurisdiction of the federal judiciary or the power of Congress – or by ignoring the question. In Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak, the 225 E.g., Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak, 501 U.S. 775, 777 (1991) (“We are asked once again to mark the boundaries of state sovereign immunity from suit in federal court.”).

---

227 See Principality of Monaco v. Mississippi, 292 U.S. 313, 322-23 (1934) (“Manifestly, we cannot rest with a mere literal application of the words of § 2 of Article III, or assume that the letter of the Eleventh Amendment exhausts the restrictions upon suits against non-consenting States.”). See generally Larry Alexander & Frederick Schauer, Defending Judicial Supremacy: A Reply, 17 CONST. COMM. 455, 463 (2000) (“The question of how we are to ground the Constitution is preconstitutional and extraconstitutional, and so the question of how we are to understand the Constitution is likewise preconstitutional and extraconstitutional.”). Cf. John F. Manning, The Eleventh Amendment and the Reading of Precise Constitutional Texts, 113 YALE L. J. 1663, 1725-28 (2004) (discussing Principality of Monaco, 292 U.S. 313).

228 See Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 782 (“We have repeatedly held that Indian tribes would enjoy sovereign immunity against suits by States … as it would be absurd to suggest that the tribes surrendered immunity in a convention to which they were not even parties.”) (citing Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Citizen Band Potawatomi Indian Tribe of Oklahoma, 498 U.S. 505, 509 (1991)).

State of Alaska’s legislature enacted a law providing annual oil revenue-sharing payments to Native village governments. Acting upon the advice of the state attorney general, the legislature then amended the statute to include all unincorporated local governments, reducing the amount of revenue sharing available to each Native village. The Native Villages of Noatak and Circle Village brought suit against the State seeking the original amount promised by the legislature. Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida involved the enforcement provisions of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, which authorized Indian tribes to sue States for refusing to negotiate casino-style gaming compacts in good faith. And Idaho v. Coeur d’Alene Tribe of Idaho involved the question of whether the banks and submerged lands of Lake Coeur d’Alene were owned by the Coeur d’Alene Tribe or the State of Idaho, requiring an interpretation of an executive order that defined the boundaries of the Tribe’s reservation. None of these cases reached a decision on the merits due to the Court’s interpretation of the Eleventh Amendment and refusal to apply the doctrine of Ex parte Young.

While these cases reached the Supreme Court styled as federal Indian law cases, in actuality none of them were Indian law cases. Perhaps of all the cases discussed in this Article, Seminole Tribe is the most obvious example of a major Indian law-related fact and legal pattern hi-jacked by the Supreme

---

230 See id. at 777-778.

231 See id. at 778.

232 See id.

236 See Coeur d’Alene Tribe, 521 U.S. at 264.

237 See id. at 264-65 (citing Exec. Order of Nov. 8, 1873, reprinted in 1 Charles J. Kappers, Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties 837 (1904)).

238 See Coeur d’Alene Tribe, 521 U.S. at 268 (“Were we to abandon our understanding of the Eleventh Amendment as reflecting a broader principle of sovereign immunity, the Tribe’s suit … might proceed.”); id. at 281 (“[T]he suit, we decide, falls on the Eleventh Amendment side of the line [of the Ex parte Young doctrine], and Idaho’s sovereign immunity controls.”) (citing Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123 (1908)); Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 47 (“We hold that … the Indian Commerce Clause does not grant Congress [the power to abrogate state Eleventh Amendment sovereign immunity]. … We further hold that the doctrine of Ex parte Young … may not be used to enforce [the gaming act] against a state official.”); Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 782 (holding that the Eleventh Amendment bars suit against a state by an Indian tribe).

The dispute over Lake Coeur d’Alene did reach resolution (and in the Tribe’s favor) after the United States intervened on behalf of the Tribe. See Idaho v. United States, 533 U.S. 262 (2001).
Court’s interest in deciding important constitutional concerns. The critical legal question identified by Chief Justice Rehnquist was “whether Congress has acted ‘pursuant to a valid exercise of power,’”239 in its attempt to waive state sovereign immunity under the Eleventh Amendment. In that case, Congress had attempted to exercise its authority under the Indian Commerce Clause.240 Rather than delve into the Court’s precedents about the scope of Congressional authority under the Indian Commerce Clause or even the Framers’ views about the Clause, Chief Justice Rehnquist’s majority opinion offered no discussion whatsoever about Congressional authority under the Clause. Instead, the opinion focused on precedents (and some legal history) relating to the Interstate Commerce Clause, first noting that the Court had recognized Congressional authority to abrogate Eleventh Amendment immunity in only two circumstances – in accordance with Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment and in accordance with the Interstate Commerce Clause.241 The opinion glossed over Congressional authority under the Indian Commerce Clause, treating that rich and varied history as all but irrelevant,242 choosing instead to focus on the lone Interstate Commerce Clause case that had recognized Congressional authority to abrogate Eleventh Amendment immunity – *Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co.*243 Chief Justice Rehnquist’s opinion overruled that case, attacking the rationale of Justice Brennan’s plurality opinion on numerous grounds.244 At that point, given that the Court denied Congress authority under the Interstate Commerce Clause to abrogate Eleventh Amendment immunity (for that Clause was one conceivable source of Congressional authority to deal with Indian gaming), the logical next question would be whether the Indian Commerce Clause supplied Congress that authority.

Put simply, the Court refused to analyze that question. The Court did conclude (without citation or analysis) that “[i]f anything, the Indian Commerce Clause accomplishes a greater transfer of power from the States to 239 Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 55 (quoting Green v. Mansour, 474 U.S. 64, 68 (1985)).

---

240 See id. at 60 (citing Brief for Petitioner 17, Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida, 517 U.S. 44 (1996) (No. 94-12)).
241 See id. at 59 (citing Fitzpatrick v. Bitzer, 427 U.S. 445, 453 (1976) (Section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment), and Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co., 491 U.S. 1, 19 (1989) (plurality opinion) (Interstate Commerce Clause)).
242 See id. at 60-61 (citing Cotton Petroleum Corp. v. New Mexico, 490 U.S. 163, 192 (1989); County of Oneida of N.Y. v. Oneida Indian Nation of N.Y., 470 U.S. 226, 234 (1985); United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 383-84 (1886)).
244 See Seminole Tribe, 517 U.S. at 63-73.
the Federal Government than does the Interstate Commerce Clause.”

But the Court refused to disclose just how much or what kind of authority Congress had under the Indian Commerce Clause vis a vis the Eleventh Amendment, asserting, “[T]he plurality opinion in Union Gas allows no principled distinction between the Indian Commerce Clause and the Interstate Commerce Clause.” This is a classic non sequitur.

If the Court were serious about focusing on the Indian Commerce Clause instead of overruling an irrelevant precedent, it could have engaged in a serious analysis of the scope of Congressional power under the Indian Commerce Clause. A quick review of the Constitutional Convention provides evidence that the Indian Commerce Clause should be interpreted in a manner different than both the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Clauses – the Framers drafted the Indian Commerce Clause for different reasons than the other two Commerce Clauses and, perhaps as a result, added the clause to the Constitution much later in the Convention:

The provision for regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the several states had been published by the committee of detail two weeks, and definitely approved by the convention two days, before the subject of the Indian trade was introduced on the floor of the convention. It was not until several days later that the latter reported out of committee, still encumbered with some of the qualifications attached to it in the articles; and less than two weeks before the close of the convention that it was finally incorporated with the rest of the commerce clause and approved in the form with which we are familiar. By this time, the larger part of the discussion in the federal convention relative to commercial regulations was 245 Id. at 62; see also id. (“This is clear enough from the fact that the States still exercise some authority over interstate trade but have been divested of virtually all authority over Indian commerce and Indian tribes.”).

---

246 Id. at 63.

247 See Albert S. Abel, The Commerce Clause in the Constitutional Convention and in Contemporary Comment, 25 MINN. L. REV. 432, 467-68 (1941); see also id. at 467 (citing ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION art. IX(4)) (emphasis added). Professor Abel focused on a notorious proviso reserving some state authority in the Indian Affairs clause of the Articles of Confederation that so infuriated James Madison. See THE FEDERALIST No. 42, at 269 (James Madison) (Clinton Rossiter ed. 1961) (referring to the proviso as “absolutely incomprehensible”); 1 RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787, at 316 (Madison) (Max Farrand rev. ed. 1937) (Yale University Press 1966) (“By the federal articles, transactions with the Indians appertain to Congs. Yet in several instances, the States have entered into treaties & wars with them.”).

248 See 2 RECORDS, supra note __, at 324 (Madison).
over, and in that which did take place later there is no language relating even remotely to Indian trade.\footnote{Abel, \textit{supra} note __, at 467-68 (citing 2 \textsc{Records}, \textit{supra} note __, at 321 (Journal)) (other footnotes omitted).}

Professor Abel, after listing the evidence, concluded, “Whatever regulation of commerce might mean in connection with transactions with the Indians, it was so distinct and specialized a subject as to afford no basis for argument as to the meaning of the rest of the clause.”\footnote{Abel, \textit{supra} note __, at 468.} Moreover, the Framers intended that Congress’s authority over Indian Commerce extend beyond mere “commerce.” As Professor Robert Stern argued, the Framers intended the Constitution to serve as a “fix” on the problem of the Articles of Confederation, which had allowed the states to muddy the waters of federal Indian affairs policy.\footnote{\textit{See} Robert L. Stern, \textit{That Commerce Which Concerns More States than One}, 47 \textsc{Harv. L. Rev.} 1335, 1342 (1934).} Stern asserted that “the whole spirit of the proceedings indicates that … the draughtsmen meant commerce to have a broad meaning with relation to the Indians….”\footnote{Stern, \textit{supra} note __, at 1342.} In fact, Stern acknowledged that “[t]he exigencies of the time may have called for a more complete system of regulating affairs with the Indians than of controlling commerce among the states….”\footnote{Stern, \textit{supra} note __, at 1342 n. 27.} Unfortunately, no party to the matter and not even any of the numerous amici noted this important historical information.

In short, \textit{Seminole Tribe}’s outcome – and the fate of an important provision in the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act – rested with the Court’s treatment of a case interpreting the Interstate Commerce Clause, not the Indian Commerce Clause.

In a similar vein, the Court in \textit{Blatchford} and in \textit{Coeur d’Alene Tribe} focused on two areas related to Eleventh Amendment immunity: (1) the requirement that Congress must express its power to abrogate sovereign immunity “by a clear legislative statement;”\footnote{\textit{Blatchford v. Native Village of Noatak}, 501 U.S. 775, 786 (1991) (citing \textit{Dellmuth v. Muth}, 491 U.S. 223, 227-28 (1989)).} and (2) the \textit{Ex parte Young} “exception” to sovereign immunity.\footnote{\textit{See} \textit{Idaho v. Coeur d’Alene Tribe of Idaho}, 521 U.S. 261, 281-82 (1991); \textit{see also} \textit{Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida}, 517 U.S. 44, 76 (1996) (rejecting without analysis the potential application of \textit{Ex parte Young}).} In \textit{Blatchford}, the tribal interests had argued that 28 U.S.C. § 1362, recognizing federal subject matter jurisdiction over claims brought by Indian tribes, served as a waiver of Eleventh Amendment immunity.\footnote{\textit{See Blatchford}, 501 U.S. at 786.} In \textit{Coeur d’Alene Tribe}, the Tribe sued officials of the State of Idaho under Ex parte Young, asserting that their assertion of state jurisdiction over the disputed territory constituted “an ongoing violation of its property rights in contravention of federal law and [sought] prospective injunctive relief.” 257 The Court rejected the Tribe’s application to take advantage of the Ex parte Young exception because to authorize the suit would constitute a de facto quiet title action against the State itself. 258 As with Seminole Tribe, these cases offer little or no discussion of foundational federal Indian law principles. 259

Several alleged Indian law cases of the past three decades have involved individual or tribal civil rights claims against the federal or state government or their officials. While the underlying subject matter of these cases had federal Indian law at their core, the Court’s primary concern in these cases appears to be the jurisprudence relating to the liability of federal and state governments to civil rights claims under Section 1983 and the Fifth Amendment. The four cases discussed in the subpart split down the middle, with two major wins for tribal interests (Morton v. Mancari 260 and Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez 261), one major loss (Nevada v. Hicks 262), and one split decision (Inyo County v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Community of the Bishop Colony 263), although this discussion will focus on the portion of the Inyo County case that the tribal interests lost.

Consider first Morton v. Mancari. In Mancari, non-Indian employees of the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) challenged a federal regulation awarding preferential treatment to American Indians in BIA employment promotion and demotion decisions. 264 The BIA’s employment preference complied with Congressional policy first articulated in the Indian Reorganization Act and extended in various other Congressional

---

257 Coeur d’Alene Tribe, 521 U.S. at 281.
258 See id. at 282.
259 To be fair, Justice Scalia’s Blatchford opinion does offer a neat and tidy federal Indian law syllogism: “But if the convention could not surrender the tribes’ immunity for the benefit of the States, we do not believe that it surrendered the States’ immunity for the benefit of the tribes.” Blatchford, 501 U.S. at 782 (emphasis in original).
264 See Mancari, 417 U.S. at 538.
Most of the Court’s attention focused on the “‘cardinal rule … that repeals by implication are not favored.’” The challengers argued that the 1972 statute banning employment discrimination in most areas of the federal government had served to repeal the Indian preference policy. The Court noted that while federal anti-discrimination policy had changed to favor federal employees, Congress had bolstered federal policy in relation to Indian preference in employment within months of the 1972 statute. The Court was able to apply two of its canons of statutory construction that a specific statute will control over a general statute and that two statutes that are not irreconcilable should be interpreted to preserve both. The Court held that the 1972 general prohibition on discrimination in federal employment did not serve to repeal Congress’s continued authorization of Indian preference in employment in certain federal agencies. This holding of the Mancari Court—a non-federal Indian law issue—continues to be the most important holding of the case, with numerous Supreme Court decisions citing to this opinion.

The Mancari Court also held that the Fifth Amendment’s due process clause did not bar the BIA from offering a preference in employment to American Indians. Relying on foundational federal Indian law and policy, the Court noted that the Indian preference in employment was an important element of modern federal Indian policy that would seek to avoid the history 266 Id. at 549-50 (citing Posadas v. National City Bank, 296 U.S. 497, 503 (1936); Wood v. United States, 16 Pet. 342-343, 363 (1842); Universal Interpretive Shuttle Corp. v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Comm’n, 393 U.S. 186, 193 (1968)).

268 See id. at 548 (citing 20 U.S.C. §§ 887c(a), (d), § 1119a) (1970 ed., Supp. II)).
269 See id. at 550-51 (citing Bulova Watch Co. v. United States, 365 U.S. 753, 758 (1961); Rodgers v. United States, 185 U.S. 83, 87-89 (1902)).
270 See id. at 551 (citing United States v. Borden Co., 308 U.S. 188, 198 (1939)).
271 See id. at 547-51.
273 See Mancari, 417 U.S. at 553-55 (citing Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954)). Importantly, given the importance of the implied repeals portion of the case, the three-judge district court panel never reached this question. See Mancari, 359 F. Supp. at 591.
of “overly paternalistic” Indian policy.\textsuperscript{274} The Court focused on the plenary power of Congress to effectuate Indian affairs policy,\textsuperscript{275} as well as the serious problem of the vulnerability of an entire title of the United States Code (Title 25 – Indians) should Congressional legislation affecting Indians be classified as race-based legislation.\textsuperscript{276} In short, the Court held, Indian preferences were not race-based classifications, but classifications based on the political status of Indians and Indian tribes, negating any equal protection violation under the Fifth Amendment.\textsuperscript{277} But this holding can be construed as more than a vindication of federal Indian policy favoring Indian people – in fact, as some scholars may have implied,\textsuperscript{278} the Mancari Court’s equal protection holding should be placed in the greater context of the viability of the Bolling v. Sharpe holding that an equal protection clause should be implied by the Fifth Amendment’s due process clause.\textsuperscript{279} Consider further that the Burger Court’s prime directive from the Nixon Administration, assuming such a directive was persuasive to the individuals on the Burger Court, was to roll back or at least contain the Warren Court’s expansive reading of implied constitutional rights.\textsuperscript{280} Perhaps Mancari was a place where some of the Warren Court holdovers could agree with some of the Nixon conservatives that the Bolling holding could be limited because the limit benefited a discrete minority – American Indians. Surely, federal Indian law played an important part in this \textsuperscript{274} Id. at 553.

\textsuperscript{275} See id. at 551-52 (citing the Indian Commerce Clause, CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 3; Board of County Commissioners v. Seber, 318 U.S. 705, 715 (1943)).
\textsuperscript{276} See id. at 552-53 (“Literally every piece of legislation dealing with Indian tribes and reservations, and certainly all legislation dealing with the BIA, single out for special treatment a constituency of tribal Indians living on or near reservations. If these laws, derived from historical relationships and explicitly designed to help only Indians, were deemed invidious racial discrimination, an entire Title of the United States Code (25 U.S.C.) would be effectively erased and the solemn commitment of the Government toward the Indians would be jeopardized.”) (citing Simmons v. Eagle Seelatsee, 244 F. Supp. 808, 814 n. 13 (E.D. Wash. 1965), aff’d, 384 U.S. 209 (1966)).
\textsuperscript{277} See id. at 553-54 & n. 24.
decision, but it appears likely that much more salient constitutional concerns were at play as well.

Consider next Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, perhaps the most powerful Supreme Court precedent of the modern era favoring Indian tribes. In Martinez, a female member of the Santa Clara Pueblo brought suit on behalf of herself and her children under a provision in the Indian Civil Rights Act requiring Indian tribes to guarantee the equal protection of the law. The petitioner claimed that the Santa Clara membership ordinance discriminated against her and her children on the basis of sex because it granted membership status to children of male members of the community and female nonmembers while simultaneously denying membership to children of female members of the community and male nonmembers. In rejecting the claim, the Martinez Court affirmed that the Supreme Court would recognize the sovereign immunity of Indian tribes from suit on the same basis as federal and state immunity. The Court held that the Indian Civil Rights Act, while a valid act of Congress imposing rigorous duties on tribal government, did not operate to waive the immunity of Indian tribes from suit in federal court, noting that Congressional waivers of immunity from suit must be express, not implied. While this holding has been critical to Indian tribes and serves as a foundation of modern Indian law, it is important to note for our purposes that the Court borrowed from non-Indian law sovereign immunity cases in its reasoning, apparently bringing tribal sovereign immunity cases into a sort of doctrinal consistency with federal and state immunity cases. Nevertheless, this aspect of Martinez is a critical Indian law holding.

---

282 See Martinez, 436 U.S. at 51 (citing 25 U.S.C. § 1302(8)).
283 See id.
285 The Court noted and the Pueblo conceded that Congress had plenary power to alter the sovereign powers of Indian tribes, see id. at 58 (citing Talton v. Mayes, 163 U.S. 376, 384 (1896); United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 379-81 (1885); Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U.S. 294, 305-07 (1902)).
287 See id. (citing Testan and King).
Like Mancari, however, Martinez can be read as a case limiting the kind of “judicial activism” linked with the Warren Court (garnering the votes of some Nixon conservatives) that still upheld the rights of a discrete minority (garnering the vote of some Warren Court holdovers). As with Mancari and the doctrine of implied repeals, the proxy for this unusual alignment could have been the Court’s disfavor in recognizing an implied private cause of action in a civil rights statute. The Indian Civil Rights Act’s sole cause of action to enforce its provisions was the authorization to petition for a writ of habeas corpus for those convicted of a crime in tribal court. The Court noted that there were two critical (and competing) purposes in the Act: “In addition to its objective of strengthening the position of individual tribal members vis-à-vis the tribe, Congress also intended to promote the well-established federal ‘policy of furthering Indian self-government.’” The Court asserted that Congressional intent to further tribal self-government would be defeated to some extent by opening the federal courts to individuals seeking to enforce the Act, holding that Congress’s failure to provide a general cause of action was “deliberate.”

There is no doubt that Justice Marshall’s majority opinion offered a substantial defense of tribal sovereignty, imputing, for example, in the Indian Civil Rights Act a Congressional intent to assist in the development of tribal dispute resolution forums, including tribal courts. The majority found this intent to exclude most cases from federal court jurisdiction despite contradictory legislative history suggesting that Congress intended for the Act to correct at least five pre-1968 federal court cases denying a civil rights remedy to plaintiffs. This evidence reveals a powerful recognition of tribal sovereignty and federal Indian policy favoring tribal governments played an important role in the Court’s reasoning on one hand, but the Court still denied

---

289 See Martinez, 436 U.S. at 60 (citing Cort v. Ash, 422 U.S. 66 (1975)).
292 See id. at 59-60, 63-64.
294 See id. at 59-60 (citing Fisher, 424 U.S. at 387-88; Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217, 223 (1959)).
a federal forum for individuals to vindicate their civil rights. It is possible to conclude that while individual Justices may have voted in favor of the Pueblo out of concern for tribal sovereignty, others may have voted in favor of the Pueblo as a means to deny the creation of yet another implied cause of action in a civil rights case.

The final two cases in this section concern the Court’s Section 1983 jurisprudence. Specifically, Nevada v. Hicks concerns the ability of individuals to sue state law enforcement officials in tribal courts, while Inyo County v. Paiute-Shoshone Indians of the Bishop Community of the Bishop Colony concerns the standing of Indian tribes to bring Section 1983 claims against state officials. In Hicks, a tribal member’s on-reservation home was the subject of a pair of search warrants issued by Nevada courts (one of which had been domesticized in the reservation tribal court), authorizing state officers to search for evidence that the tribal member had taken a California bighorn sheep in violation of state law. The tribal member, Floyd Hicks, brought suit in tribal court, claiming that the state officers (and others, including tribal officers) had violated his civil rights and sought relief under Section 1983. The Court rejected the claims on the twin theories that the tribal court did not have jurisdiction over the state officers under principles of federal Indian law and that the tribal court could not have jurisdiction over Section 1983 claims. Justice O’Connor, concurring in the result, noted that state sovereign immunity principles should have controlled the outcome, asserting that the majority’s discussion of federal Indian law principles were unnecessary and damaging to tribal sovereignty. In the context of this Article, which alleges that the Court’s Members are more likely to vote in accordance with important constitutional concerns and not federal Indian law principles, Hicks is an important anomaly. Justice Scalia’s majority opinion begins with an analysis of federal Indian law principles – and, in dramatic fashion, reworks those principles in broad strokes against tribal interests. The opinion undermines the principle of federal Indian law that state laws do not have (much) force in Indian Country by expanding for the first time the so-called Montana rule into tribal reservation and trust lands. Justice Scalia justified the unprecedented state law intervention into

---

298 See Hicks, 533 U.S. at 356-57.
299 See id. at 357.
300 See id. at 357-66 (federal Indian law principles); id. at 366-69 (Section 1983).
301 See id. at 397-401 (O’Connor, J., concurring in the result).
302 See id. at 360-65.
303 See id. at 361 (citing United States Dept. of Interior, Federal Indian Law 510 & n. 1 (1958), citing in turn Utah v. Northern Railroad Co. v. Fisher, 116 U.S. 28 (1885);
Indian Country on the basis that state law enforcement interests simply outweighed the tribe’s interest in governing itself.\textsuperscript{304} The majority’s next point, that Congress never intended or authorized tribal courts to assume jurisdiction over Section 1983 claims,\textsuperscript{305} could have (and should have) disposed of the issue without reference to federal Indian law principles about the jurisdiction of Indian tribes or tribal courts. If a tribal court could not assume jurisdiction over a Section 1983 claim against a state law enforcement officer, then that court would not be able to assert it under federal Indian law, either. The Court could have remanded the federal Indian law question back to the lower courts for a determination of whether some independent federal Indian law principle would justify or authorize the tribal court to take jurisdiction over Section 1983 claims.

The \textit{Hicks} opinion could have looked more like the short opinion in \textit{Inyo County}, which held that Indian tribes are not “persons” as defined by Section 1983.\textsuperscript{306} In \textit{Inyo County}, the state had raided a tribal business enterprise and confiscated employment records in accordance with a state search warrant, but without tribal authorization.\textsuperscript{307} The Court reached an unusual conclusion that, although the definitions of “persons” under the Sherman Act and the False Claims Act allows states and foreign nations to sue to vindicate rights under those statutes, Section 1983’s definition of “person” does not include Indian tribes.\textsuperscript{308} The tribe had also relied upon the federal Indian law principle of tribal sovereign immunity and other federal common law principles to avoid the search warrant, issues the Court remanded.\textsuperscript{309}

Of the four cases discussed in this part, \textit{Inyo County}, perhaps, is the case that implicates federal Indian law principles the least. Each case, however, could have been decided on grounds utterly unrelated to federal Indian law. It is a strong possibility in each case that some Members of each Court (perhaps a significant plurality) signed on to a majority opinion focused \item \textit{Organized Village of Kake v. Egan}, 369 U.S. 60, 72 (1962)). Justice Ginsburg’s short concurrence disputed the majority’s conclusion that the tribal or non-tribal character of the land was irrelevant. \textit{See id.} at 386 (Ginsburg, J., concurring) (citing \textit{Strate v. A-1 Contractors}, 520 U.S. 438, 456 (1997)).

\begin{itemize}
\item \textit{See id.} at 363-64.
\item \textit{See id.} at 366-67.
\item \textit{See Inyo County}, 538 U.S. at 712.
\item \textit{See id.} at 705.
\item \textit{See id.} at 711 (citing Pfizer, Inc. v. Government of India, 434 U.S. 308, 309-20 (1978); Georgia v. Evans, 316 U.S. 159, 160-63 (1942)). \textit{But see id.} at 713 (Stevens, J., concurring in the judgment) (“It is demeaning to Native American tribes to deny them the same access to a § 1983 remedy that is available to any other person whose constitutional rights are violated by persons acting under color of state law.”).
\item \textit{See id.} at 712.
\end{itemize} on federal Indian law principles because that opinion also vindicated a non-Indian law-related constitutional concern important to them. Consider that each of the four cases includes an important element of what Professor Jed Rubenfeld refers to as the Rehnquist Court’s “anti-anti-discrimination agenda.”

As Professor Rubenfeld puts it, “The anti-anti-discrimination agenda would be especially hostile to claims that a person has been ‘discriminated against’ when he had merely been asked to abide by the same laws as everyone else…. The more recent cases, Hicks and Inyo County, fit this category, with the Court implying that Indians and tribes are not special, that they can and should seek to vindicate whatever rights they might have in some other manner besides civil rights laws. Professor Rubenfeld identified hostility from the Rehnquist Court toward “any other laws extending the concept of discrimination beyond the confines that the Court itself has laid down.”
The claims in Mancari and Martinez appear to fit this category, with the Court refusing to find implied substantive rights or causes of action in either the Fifth Amendment or the Indian Civil Rights.

Commercial Passenger Fishing Vessel Association (1979)

Indian treaty rights cases form a significant portion of the core of federal Indian law, but the foundational case discussed in this subpart also demonstrate that non-Indian law-related constitutional concerns drove the Court’s decisions. In Washington v. Washington Commercial Passenger Fishing Vessel Association, the Court affirmed the foundation of the famous “Boldt decision” recognizing Indian treaty fishing rights in the Puget Sound area. But the case included a major question relating to the granting of full faith and credit of federal court orders in state courts, a question

\[310 \text{ See RUBENFELD, supra note } __, at 176-79.]
\[311 \text{ Id. at 176.} \]
\[312 \text{ Id.} \]
\[314 \text{ See Fishing Vessel, 443 U.S. at } __. \] \[315 \text{ See generally Fishing Vessel, 443 U.S. at 669 n. 14 (“The impact of illegal regulation … and of illegal exclusionary tactics by non-Indians … in large measure accounts for the decline of the Indian fisheries during this century and renders that decline irrelevant to a determination of the fishing rights the Indians assumed they were securing by initialing the treaties in the middle of the last century.”) (citing Tulee v. Washington, 315 U.S. 681 (1942); United States v. Winans, 198 U.S. 371 (1905)); id. at 672 n. 19 (“[T]he reason for our recent} \]
This case can be seen as a rehash of Worcester. In this case, the culmination of dozens of lawsuits and federal and state court decisions, the Court was confronted with the fact that a state supreme court had interpreted a treaty in ways that conflicted with federal court interpretations. Moreover, lower state courts and state officials had a long history of violating federal court orders throughout the larger dispute over treaty fishing rights. Of course, this problem implicated the Court’s supervisory responsibility.\(^{317}\) grant of certiorari on the question remains because the state courts are—and, at least since the State Supreme Court’s decision in Department of Game v. Puyallup Tribe, 86 Wash.2d 664, 548 P.2d 1058 (1976), have been—on record as interpreting the treaties involved differently from the federal courts.”); id. at 673 (“When Fisheries was ordered by the state courts to abandon its attempt to promulgate and enforce regulations in compliance with the federal court’s decree—and when the Game Department simply refused to comply—the District Court entered a series of orders enabling it, with the aid of the United States Attorney for the Western District of Washington and various federal law enforcement agencies, directly to supervise those aspects of the State’s fisheries necessary to the preservation of treaty fishing rights.”) (citing United States v. Washington, 459 F. Supp. 1020 (W.D. Wash.), aff’d, 573 F.2d 1123 (9th Cir. 1978)); id. at 674 (“Because of the widespread defiance of the District Court’s orders, this litigation has assumed unusual significance. We granted certiorari in the state and federal cases to interpret this important treaty provision and thereby to resolve the conflict between the state and federal courts regarding what, if any, right the Indians have to a share of the fish, to address the implications of international regulation of the fisheries in the area, and to remove any doubts about the federal court’s power to enforce its orders.”) (citing Washington v. United States, 439 U.S. 909 (1978)).

\(^{316}\) CONST. art. IV, § 1 (requiring state courts to give full faith and credit to each other’s decisions); CONST. art. VI, ¶ 2 (Supremacy Clause); 28 U.S.C. § 1738 (requiring state courts to give full faith and credit to federal courts and vice versa).

\(^{317}\) Another case, United States v. Dion, 476 U.S. 734 (1986), is a question about Congressional power to abrogate treaties with later-enacted legislation, see Dion, 476 U.S. at 738 (“It is long settled that ‘the provisions of an act of Congress, passed in the exercise of its constitutional authority, … if clear and explicit, must be upheld by the courts, even in contravention of express stipulations in an earlier treaty’ with a foreign power.”) (quoting Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U.S. 698, 720 (1893), and citing Goldwater v. Carter, 444 U.S. 696 (1979)), not to mention the serious national worry that Bald Eagles and other kinds of eagles were near extinction at the time, see Roberto Iraola, The Bald and Golden Eagle Protection Act, 68 ALB. L. REV. 973, 974 n. 9 (2005) (citing Bald Eagle Protection Act, ch. 278, 54 Stat. 250 (1940)).

One final case, Minnesota v. Mille Lacs Band of Chippewa Indians, 526 U.S. 172 (1999), is a similar question about Executive power to abrogate treaties. See Mille Lacs, 526 U.S. at 188-89 (“The President’s power, if any, to issue the order must stem either from an act of Congress or from the Constitution itself.”) (quoting Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 585 (1952)); id. at 196 (citing El Al Israel Airlines, Ltd. v. Tsui Yuan Tseng, 525 U.S. 155, 167 (1999), a case describing means of interpreting foreign treaties). For background and commentary on this important case, please see JAMES M. MCCLURKEN ET AL., FISH IN THE GREAT LAKES, WILD RICE AND GAME IN ABUNDANCE: TESTIMONY ON BEHALF OF MILLE LACS OJIBWE HUNTING AND FISHING RIGHTS (2000); Kristen A. Carpenter,

In the two major Indian religious freedom cases in the modern era, tribal interests went down in humiliating defeat. In the first, Lyng v. Northwest Indian Cemetery Protective Association, the tribal interests attempted to prevent the United States Forest Service from constructing a road through an area in northern California sacred to the Yurok, Karuk, Tolowa Indians. Conceding that the construction of the road would be “devastating” to the religion (but doubting that it would “doom” the religion), Justice O’Connor’s majority opinion focused on two points. First, the land at issue was owned by the federal government and the Court disfavored outsider attempts to control federal land projects. Second, the Lyng majority was concerned that the Court would be forced to choose one religion over

---

The constitutional concern in these cases has little to do with tribal interests. The Court’s interest was the extent of Congressional and Executive authority to abrogate treaties. The fact that they were Indian treaties is all but irrelevant.

---

319 See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 442-45.
320 Lyng, 485 U.S. at 451; see also id. (“The Government does not dispute, and we have no reason to doubt, that the logging and road-building projects at issue in this case could have devastating effects on traditional Indian religious practices. Those practices are intimately and inextricably bound up with the unique features of the Chimney Rock area, which is known to the Indians as the ‘high country.’ Individual practitioners use this area for personal spiritual development; some of their activities are believed to be critically important in advancing the welfare of the Tribe, and indeed, of mankind itself. The Indians use this area, as they have used it for a very long time, to conduct a wide variety of specific rituals that aim to accomplish their religious goals. According to their beliefs, the rituals would not be efficacious if conducted at other sites than the ones traditionally used, and too much disturbance of the area’s natural state would clearly render any meaningful continuation of traditional practices impossible.”).
321 Lyng, 485 U.S. at 451 (“To be sure, the Indians themselves were far from unanimous in opposing the G-O road, … and it seems less than certain that construction of the road will be so disruptive that it will doom their religion. Nevertheless, we can assume that the threat to the efficacy of at least some religious practices is extremely grave.”).
322 See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 453 (“Whatever rights the Indians may have to the use of the area, however, those rights do no divest the Government of its right to use what it, after all, its land.”) (emphasis in original); id. at 452 (“The First Amendment must apply to all citizens alike, and it can give to none of them a veto over public programs.”).
another, second-guess the salience of religious belief, or interpret the religious tenets of unfamiliar religions. The Court noted that its validation of the tribal claim would result in a situation where “government ... were required to satisfy every citizen’s religious needs and desires.” But foundational federal Indian law principles would have required the Court to address the possibility that in the case of the California Indians, the United States may have agreed via treaty that these specific Indian religious practices or these Indian lands must be protected from federal interference. That might have required the Court to address the sticky question of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hildalgo and the subsequent unratified California Indian treaties of the 1850s. This, course, the Court did not do. The difficult hypothetical questions concerning Justice O’Connor would not have arisen in this context, nor would this case have constituted a precedent for any other kind of religious freedom cases.

323 See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 457 (“We would accordingly be required to weigh the value of every religious belief and practice that is said to be threatened by any government program.”).
324 See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 449 (“This Court cannot determine the truth of the underlying beliefs that led to the religious objections ... and accordingly cannot weigh the adverse effects ... on the Indian respondents.”) (citing Hobbie v. Unemployment Appeals Commission of Florida, 480 U.S. 136, 144 n. 9 (1987); Bowen v. Roy, 476 U.S. 693 (1986)).
325 See Lyng, 485 U.S. at 457-58 (“In other words, the dissent’s approach would require us to rule that same religious adherents misunderstand their own religious beliefs.”).
326 Lyng, 485 U.S. at 452; see also id. (“A broad range of government activities - from social welfare programs to foreign aid to conservation projects - will always be considered essential to the spiritual well-being of some citizens, often on the basis of sincerely held religious beliefs. Others will find the very same activities deeply offensive, and perhaps incompatible with their own search for spiritual fulfillment and with the tenets of their religion.”).
329 Another Indian religious freedom case, Employment Division v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872 (1990), appears to be a classic case of tribal interests being hijacked by the jurisprudential agenda of the Court and by the social policy of the federal government. In Smith, two employees (who were members of the Native American Church) of a private drug rehabilitation organization were fired for ingesting peyote as a sacrament (a bad fact pattern if there ever was one). See Smith, 494 U.S. at 874. After their termination, they sought unemployment benefits but were denied because state law categorized the use and possession of peyote as a crime. See id. at 876 (citing Employment Division v. Smith, 763 P.2d 146, 148
5. Reparations – City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation (2005)

In City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation, the Supreme Court held that the “settled expectations” of non-Indian property owners and state and local governments justified the application of equitable defenses such as laches, impossibility, and acquiescence, to Indian claims to sovereignty. The Second Circuit then applied the broadest reading of the reasoning of the Sherrill Court to dismiss Indian land claims on appeal in which the Cayuga Indian Nation had won at the trial court level over $200 million in damages and interest against the State of New York and several of its political subdivisions. In other words, any older claim to land, treaty rights, or sovereignty – no matter its merit – could be subject to equitable defenses favoring non-Indian property or governmental interests.

What is very interesting about City of Sherrill is the breadth of its reasoning. Given the existence and potential of massive claims for reparations winding their way through federal courts, Justice Ginsburg’s reasoning in City of Sherrill could apply with equal force to non-Indian reparations claims in which any “settled” property interests are at risk. The opinion serves, in some ways, as the legal implementation of philosophical objections to ancient claims. City of Sherrill may be the first shot off the bow in a larger

---

(Or. 1988)). Justice Scalia’s majority opinion extended the reach of Lyng – over Justice O’Connor’s objection, see id. at 891 (O’Connor, J., concurring in the judgment) – by eviscerating a First Amendment balancing test that required the Court to apply a form of strict scrutiny to governmental programs that substantially burdened a religious practice. See id. at 882-889 (citing Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398 (1963)). Congress reacted to the Smith decision by enacting the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. See 107 Stat. 1488, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000bb et seq.; City of Boerne v. Flores, 521 U.S. 507, 512 (1997). Moreover, the events in the case arose at the same time that the Nation was engaged in the infamous “War on Drugs.” See Gun South, Inc. v. Brady, 711 F. Supp. 1054, 1056-57 (N.D. Ala. 1989). Given this confluence of non-Indian law related factors, the petitioners in Smith had no chance.

reparations debate – and could be a signal that massive reparations are not forthcoming from this Supreme Court.

6. Remaining Post-1986 Cases

This pattern repeats in numerous other cases involving tribal interests after 1986. Fifth Amendment takings drove the Court’s decisions in Hodel v. Irving and Babbitt v. Youpee that invalidated attempts by Congress to remedy the serious problem of fractionating heirships on Indian lands. The Court held that damage to private property rights from the federal government’s exercise of its navigational servitude over riverbeds is not compensable under the Fifth Amendment in United States v. Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma. The contours of federal agency discretion drove the Court’s decisions in Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma v. Leavitt, United States v. Navajo Nation, and Lincoln v. Vigil. State compliance with the Fifteenth Amendment drove the Court’s decision in Rice v. Cayetano. The policy behind the Freedom of Information Act drove Department of Interior v. Klamath Water Users Protective Association. Rejections of the intergovernmental tax immunity doctrine and the argument that state taxes must be reasonably related to state services to taxpayers drove Cotton Petroleum v. New Mexico. The case where the Court held that tribes cannot have criminal jurisdiction over nonmembers – Duro v. Reina – focused on Congressional authority to subject American citizens to criminal prosecution in jurisdictions that do not provide American-style criminal procedure protections. Montana v. Crow Tribe of Indians relied on the principle that nontaxpayers cannot sue to recover the taxes paid by another. Amoco Production Co. v. Southern Ute Indian Tribe held that in federal land patents to private landowners reserving federal rights to coal under the surface, the patents granted rights to coal bed methane gas to the patentees and was not 341 532 U.S. 1, 8-16 (2001).

343 490 U.S. 676, 693-94 (1990) (citing Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1 (1957)).
reserved by federal law. Chickasaw Nation v. United States was a simple statutory interpretation case involving the application of canons of tax immunity interpretations. South Florida Water Management District v. Seminole Tribe of Florida held that the Clean Water Act reaches to point sources that do not generate pollution. Note that all of the above cases are losses for tribal interests.

There are several Indian law cases decided by the Court where it appears that the outcome was decided through the application of Indian law principles, but these cases are few and far between after the early 1990s and almost all of them are tax cases. Thirteen of these cases were losses for tribal interests, while five were wins.

C. Conclusions from the Survey

The previous survey may lead to some conclusions that might surprise observers of federal Indian law. As would be true with any theory, it is impossible to prove with any certainty what motivates the Justices in their voting preferences, but in several modern era cases that commentators label “federal Indian law” cases, there are significant alternative holdings or reasons unrelated to federal Indian law principles that could be used to justify the decision. Moreover, as the years advanced, it could be argued that the Court decided the cases less and less on federal Indian law principles. Three of the six Indian law decisions made in the 2003 to 2005 Terms have no Indian law issues whatsoever. In the last ten years, only one case arguably had no non-Indian law components to it\textsuperscript{351} – and every other case (again, arguably) had a non-Indian law case with an issue that might have been dispositive of the entire case. Take, for example, \textit{United States v. Navajo Nation},\textsuperscript{352} a case vilified by commentators because the Court ruled that an apparent arbitrary decision by the Secretary of Interior (in favor of a personal friend’s client) was not precluded by federal statute.\textsuperscript{353} The Court’s decision rested in part – and perhaps could have been the crux of the entire decision – on a preference for deferring to administrative agencies.\textsuperscript{354} Or take \textit{Nevada v. Hicks},\textsuperscript{355} a case ostensibly about the civil jurisdiction of tribal courts,\textsuperscript{356} could just as easily be characterized as a decision vindicating the sovereign immunity of states and their officers in foreign courts.\textsuperscript{357} Or \textit{Inyo County v. Bishop Paiute Community},\textsuperscript{358} a case about whether tribal sovereign immunity can prevent a state government officer from raiding a tribal casino facility to enforce a state civil law, turned on whether the tribe or any sovereign entity was a “person” under the meaning of federal civil rights statutes.\textsuperscript{359} \textit{Minnesota v. Mille Lacs Band} \textsuperscript{360} is a strong example of an Indian law dispute posing an important constitutional question for the Court to decide. While the origins of the dispute involved the treaty rights of the Mille Lacs Band,\textsuperscript{361} the important constitutional concern that may have been more salient for the individual Justices voting preferences was the question of whether the \textsuperscript{352} 537 U.S. 488 (2003).

\textsuperscript{354} See \textit{Navajo Nation}, 537 U.S. at 513-14 (citing Michigan Citizens for Independent Press v. Thornburg, 868 F.2d 1285 (D.C. Cir.), aff’d by an equally divided Court, 493 U.S. 38 (1989) (per curiam)).
\textsuperscript{355} 533 U.S. 353 (2001).
\textsuperscript{357} See \textit{Hicks}, 533 U.S. at 364-65 (citing Anderson v. Creighton, 483 U.S. 635, 638 (1987); Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U.S. 257, 263 (1879)).
\textsuperscript{358} 538 U.S. 701 (2003).
\textsuperscript{359} See \textit{id.} at 709-12.
\textsuperscript{360} 526 U.S. 172 (1999).
\textsuperscript{361} See \textit{id.} at 196-200.
President can abrogate a treaty without express permission of Congress.\textsuperscript{362} One could speculate that at least some or all of the five Justices that voted for the Mille Lacs Band voted because they believed the President did not have authority to unilaterally abrogate treaties – while not having a salient opinion on the treaty interpretation questions that followed.

Much more empirical work is possible here, for example, to determine whether the Court’s \textit{certiorari} decisions are influenced by a non-Indian law-related constitutional concern; whether lower federal and state courts follow this pattern; whether the apparent pattern recurs further back in Supreme Court history; and, in general, to provide further evidence on the claims made in this Article.

The purpose of the survey is to provide a means for discussing the possibility that the Rehnquist Court’s decisions where tribal interests are at stake \textit{are not federal Indian law decisions}. This possibility is not so much as raised in the scholarship analyzing these cases, with the glaring exceptions of Dean David Getches’ and Professor Phil Frickey’s work.\textsuperscript{363} It is a distinct possibility that the Indian law principles discussed, analyzed, and applied by the Court are no more than window dressing to the broader constitutional concerns attracting the Court’s attention. If this is plausible, then the way Indian law scholars and practitioners read and analyze the Court’s recent federal Indian law decisions must be reexamined.

\textbf{IV. Identifying the Constitutional and Pragmatic Concerns in the Indian Cases}

Lawrence Lessig’s compelling article, “\textit{How I Lost the Big One},” discussing his advocacy before the Supreme Court in \textit{Eldred v. Ashcroft},\textsuperscript{364} should offer important tips to tribal advocates.\textsuperscript{365} Lessig lost the case but provided powerful insights into Supreme Court litigation:

Our case had been supported from the very beginning by an extraordinary lawyer, Geoffrey Stewart, and by the law firm he had moved to, Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue. There were three

\begin{footnotesize}
\textsuperscript{362} See id. at 188-95 (citing Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 585 (1952)).
\textsuperscript{363} See generally Frickey, \textit{(Native) American Exceptionalism}, \textit{supra} note ___ (arguing that the Supreme Court is in the process of re-molding the foundational principles of federal Indian law to fit within general public law); Getches, \textit{Beyond Indian Law}, \textit{supra} note ___ (arguing that states’ rights, mainstream values, and colorblind justice drive the Court’s Indian law decisions). \textit{Cf.} RUBENFELD, \textit{supra} note ___, at 158-83 (asserting than an “anti-anti-discrimination” principle drives the Court’s civil rights docket).
\textsuperscript{364} 537 U.S. 186 (2003).
\textsuperscript{365} See Lessig, \textit{supra} note ___.
\end{footnotesize}
key lawyers on the case from Jones Day. Stewart was the first; then, Dan Bromberg and Don Ayer became quite involved. Bromberg and Ayer had a common view about how this case would be won: We would only win, they repeatedly told me, if we could make the issue seem “important” to the Supreme Court. It had to seem as if dramatic harm were being done to free speech and free culture; otherwise, the justices would never vote against “the most powerful media companies in the world.”

Lessig’s mention of an “important” issue planted the seed, in many respects, for this Article. Scholars had long scoured Supreme Court opinions, papers of the Justices, and anecdotal evidence from Justices, clerks, and litigants to discover the “important” issues that, first, make cases certworthy, and second, compel a member of the Court to vote in a certain way. Lessig’s story is a reminder that the “important” issue sometimes is not obvious unless we are willing to look in a different direction at the same questions. Indian law advocates need to do the same thing.

Further consider Professor Lessig’s review of the opinion in his case:
I first scoured the majority opinion, written by Ginsburg, looking for how the court would distinguish the principle in this case from the principle in [United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995)]. The reasoning was nowhere to be found. The case was not even cited. The core argument of our case did not even appear in the court’s opinion. I couldn’t quite believe what I was reading. I had said that there was no way this court could reconcile limited powers with the commerce clause and unlimited powers with the progress clause. It had never even occurred to me that they could reconcile the two by not addressing the argument at all.

Lessig’s review of his own case sounds terrifyingly familiar to tribal advocates reading their own cases. Critical arguments made by tribal interests that may have had powerful sway with lower court judges sometimes go nowhere with Supreme Court Justices – or are simply ignored.

Tribal advocates are starting to learn the game, but sometimes there’s just not enough to work with. For example, early in the 2005 Term, the Supreme Court heard arguments in Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, a dispute between the Nation and the State of Kansas over whether Kansas’s motor fuel tax on retailers – which was paid by the Nation when the retailers passed the tax through to their customers – was preempted by federal law and tribal sovereignty. Justice Souter asked the first question in both the state and tribal arguments – effectively contextualizing the case against the tribal interests in the first moments of the argument – of whether the tribe was acting as a government or as a business. In fact, the Nation made a powerful argument that every dollar of a tax it intended to collect once the state tax was lifted would go toward highway repairs and maintenance – a governmental function. The Court all but ignored that argument, refusing to apply the preemption test at all. In essence, the Court refused to even apply federal Indian law principles on the theory that the state levied the tax outside of Indian Country.

---

366 Id. at 59.
367 Id. at 62.

What concern did the Court have when it decided Wagnon? One possibility was that the Court was worried that the states and the federal government might adapt the Nation’s theory for their own purposes. In critiquing the Nation’s arguments, the Court appeared to imply that these federal Indian law principles might translate to state and federal tax

---

369 Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. at 680-81.
370 See Oral argument at 4, Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005) (No. 04-631) (Justice Souter: “My question is, Do we know, from the record, whether the tax that is assessed on the distributor is, in fact, passed through to the tribe so that, in economic effect, the tribe is collecting, via pass-through, the State tax and imposing its own tax and still selling at market prices?”); id. at 25 (Justice Souter: “The what’s [the Nation’s] gripe? It wants a bigger profit? … [I]f the tribe is collecting its tax, and it does not have a claim to greater taxation or greater profit, then how is its sovereign right as a taxing authority being interfered with?”).
371 See Brief for Respondent 2, Wagnon v. Prairie Band Potawatomi Nation, 126 S. Ct. 676 (2005) (No. 04-631) (“The state tax thus interferes directly with a core attribute of tribal sovereignty – the Tribe’s power to impose a fuel tax to finance the construction and maintenance of reservation roads and bridges. The State’s studied ignorance of the Tribe’s sovereign interest in taxation to support its infrastructure is ironic at best, as the power to tax is the very attribute of its own sovereignty that the State purports to vindicate. Despite the State’s contentions, this case is not about economic advantage, but about how to accommodate the competing interests of two legitimate sovereigns. The State’s solution is to deny the Tribe’s interest in its entirety.”); Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. at 698 (Ginsburg, J., dissenting) (“In sum, the Nation operates the Nation Station in order to provide a service for patrons at its casino without, in any way, seeking to attract bargain hunters on the lookout for cheap gas. Kansas’ collection of its tax on fuel destined for the Nation Station will effectively nullify the Nation’s tax, which funds critical reservation road-building programs, endeavors not aided by state funds. I resist that unbalanced judgment.”).
372 See Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. at 688 (refusing to apply the preemption test); id. at 689 (refusing to consider to roads argument).
373 See Wagnon, 126 S. Ct. at 688 (citing Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Jones, 411 U.S. 145 (1973)).
questions.\footnote{374}{See \textit{Wagnon}, 126 S. Ct. at 685-86 (citing 26 U.S.C. § 1; North American Oil Consol. v. Burnet, 386 U.S. 417, 424 (1932)).} Perhaps the Court was worried that states would demand a refund for money they paid in accordance with government contracts to construction contractors based out of state where that money could be traced to another state’s taxation (a circumstance that occurs with regularity in tribal construction projects\footnote{375}{See Matthew L.M. Fletcher, \textit{The Power to Tax, The Power to Destroy, and the Michigan Tribal-State Tax Agreements}, 82 U. DET. MERCY L. REV. 1, 27 (2004).}). Regardless, what is clear from \textit{Wagnon} is that there was no important constitutional concern supporting the tribal interests, nor were there secondary pragmatic reasons significant enough to vote for the Prairie Band.

Tribal advocates are at a serious disadvantage in constitutional litigation before the Supreme Court. As Justice Thomas pointed out, there is nothing in the constitution that reserves tribal sovereignty.\footnote{376}{See \textit{United States v. Lara}, 541 U.S. 193, 218-19 (2004) (Thomas, J., concurring).} While this might be the equivalent of Justice Black refusing to vote for mandatory busing of public schools in order to implement desegregation orders because the word “bus” doesn’t appear in the Constitution,\footnote{377}{See ROSEN, \textit{supra} note __, at 157.} Justice Thomas raised an important question that the Constitution does not answer. Since the Constitution does not assist tribal interests as much as, for example, the Tenth Amendment assists states,\footnote{378}{E.g., \textit{New York v. United States}, 505 U.S. 144, 166 (1992); \textit{Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians v. Superior Court}, 148 P.3d 1126, 1135-36 (Cal. 2006).} tribal interests may have to look to other, more pragmatic concerns and consequences that will persuade the Court. Tribal advocates in the \textit{Wagnon} case did attempt to persuade the Court by identifying considerable consequences that would arise from a ruling in favor of the State of Kansas, but these concerns did not persuade the Court in that instance.

This Part discusses four areas of federal Indian law that are strong candidates for Supreme Court review – and suggestions for identifying important constitutional concerns – or considerable pragmatic concerns – that will both compel a grant of \textit{certiorari} and garner enough votes to win a case here and there.

\textbf{A. Tribal Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction over Nonmembers}

\textbf{1. Tribal Criminal Jurisdiction}

One area of difficulty for tribal advocates will be the area of tribal criminal jurisdiction. As the following discussion shows, there are several constitutional concerns that weigh against tribal interests, but there may be

\begin{flushleft}
\footnote{377}{See ROSEN, \textit{supra} note __, at 157.}
\footnote{378}{E.g., \textit{New York v. United States}, 505 U.S. 144, 166 (1992); \textit{Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians v. Superior Court}, 148 P.3d 1126, 1135-36 (Cal. 2006).}
\end{flushleft}
some room to persuade the Court that tribal criminal jurisdiction is important for pragmatic reasons.

The Supreme Court recently decided not to hear Means v. Navajo Nation \(^{379}\) and a companion case, Morris v. Tanner,\(^{380}\) impressive victories for tribal advocates. Means, a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, faces prosecution before the Navajo tribal courts for allegedly assaulting his family members.\(^{381}\) He had argued that the Navajo Nation could not have jurisdiction over him because he was not a member of that tribe – he was a nonmember Indian.\(^{382}\) In 1990, Means’ attorney, John Trebon, had successfully argued before the Supreme Court that Indian tribes cannot prosecute nonmember Indians in Duro v. Reina \(^{383}\) and was attempting to re-establish that rule by asking the Court to strike down the “Duro Fix,” upheld in United States v. Lara in a 7-2 decision.\(^{384}\) Lara seemed to answer the question of whether tribes could prosecute nonmember Indians, but two of the seven Justices in the majority – Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice O’Connor – are no longer on the Court. And, of the remaining five members in the majority, one of them – Justices Kennedy – said that under a different procedural posturing (an appeal of the tribal court conviction), they might have voted to strike down the Duro Fix.\(^{385}\) Justice Thomas stated that he’s waiting for the Court to come to its senses in the entire body of federal Indian law and is willing to reopen federal Indian law principles that have been settled for centuries.\(^{386}\)

---

\(^{382}\) See Means II, 432 F.3d at 930-31.

\(^{385}\) See Lara, 541 U.S. at 214 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (“The present case, however, does not require us to address these difficult questions of constitutional dimension. Congress made it clear that its intent was to recognize and affirm tribal authority to try Indian nonmembers as inherent in tribal status. The proper occasion to test the legitimacy of the Tribe’s authority, that is, whether Congress had the power to do what it sought to do, was in the first, tribal proceeding. There, however, Lara made no objection to the Tribe’s authority to try him. In the second, federal proceeding, because the express rationale for the Tribe’s authority to try Lara—whether legitimate or not—was inherent sovereignty, not delegated federal power, there can be no double jeopardy violation.”).

\(^{386}\) See id. at 224 (Thomas, J., concurring) (“I do, however, agree that this case raises important constitutional questions that the Court does not begin to answer. The Court utterly fails to find any provision of the Constitution that gives Congress enumerated power to alter
Means and the Morris cases were appeals of tribal court convictions. That left only three Justices in the majority, with new Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Alito the remaining uncertain votes. In short, a 7-2 Lara decision could have turned into a 6-3 decision the other way. But the Court denied the petition for writ of certiorari.387

Counsel for Means and Morris could not have expected to win any of their appeals in the tribal courts and lower federal courts because of the decisiveness of the recent Lara decision. But they brought the cases in a manner strategically designed to attract the Court’s attention, gambling that the Court was willing to entertain a challenge to the Duro Fix – and all tribal court prosecutions – because Indian tribes are not required by federal statute to appoint counsel for indigent defendants.388 Justice Breyer’s majority opinion in Lara seemed to keep the question open.389 Moreover, nonmembers Indians are unlikely to be able to vote in tribal elections or are not eligible to sit on tribal court juries.390 Justice Kennedy, the force behind Duro v. Reina,391 was particularly concerned about tribes that prosecute people without providing these criminal process rights.392 tribal sovereignty. The Court cites the Indian Commerce Clause and the treaty power. … I cannot agree that the Indian Commerce Clause “‘provide[s] Congress with plenary power to legislate in the field of Indian affairs.’” … [quoting Cotton Petroleum Corp. v. New Mexico, 490 U.S. 163, 192 (1989)]. At one time, the implausibility of this assertion at least troubled the Court, see, e.g., United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 378-379 (1886) (considering such a construction of the Indian Commerce Clause to be ‘very strained’), and I would be willing to revisit the question. Cf., e.g., United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598 (2000); United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549 (1995); id., at 584-593 (THOMAS, J., concurring).”).

389 See Lara, 541 U.S. at 207-08.
390 Cf. Lara, 541 U.S. 208-09 (rejecting Lara’s due process and equal protection arguments).
391 495 U.S. 676 (1990); see also Oliphant v. Schlie, 544 F.2d 1007, 1014 (9th Cir. 1976) (Kennedy, C.J., dissenting) (arguing that Indian tribes should not have criminal jurisdiction over nonmembers), rev’d sub nom., Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978).
392 See Lara, 541 U.S. at 212 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (“The Constitution is based on a theory of original, and continuing, consent of the governed. Their consent depends on the understanding that the Constitution has established the federal structure, which grants the citizen the protection of two governments, the Nation and the State. Each sovereign must respect the proper sphere of the other, for the citizen has rights and duties as to both. See U.S. Term Limits, Inc. v. Thornton, 514 U.S. 779, 838-839 (1995) (Kennedy, J., concurring). Here, contrary to this design, the National Government seeks to subject a citizen to the criminal jurisdiction of a third entity to be tried for conduct occurring wholly within the territorial borders of the Nation and one of the States. This is unprecedented. There is a historical exception for Indian tribes, but only to the limited extent that a member of a tribe
Even if the Court does not acknowledge an important constitutional concern favoring tribal interests, important and significant pragmatic concerns are present in these types of cases. Intermarriage between tribes and increased tribal employment opportunities are longstanding facts in most tribal communities, guaranteeing the presence of a significant population of nonmember Indians on most reservations. Taking away federal recognition of and respect for the convictions of nonmember Indians – like the Court did in Duro – created a significant loophole in tribal law enforcement that even a lumbering bear like Congress understood needed quick corrective action. The consequences of creating yet another loophole in the tribal-federal-state law enforcement jurisdictional scheme in Indian Country (sometimes referred to as a “maze,”) – the first major loophole being the refusal of the Court to recognize tribal criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians in Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe – could be significant to Indian Country. If tribal advocates can provide empirical research that shows there was an increase in crime (both qualitatively and quantitatively) by non-Indians after Oliphant, it might persuade a law-and-order Justice that the constitutional concerns are not dispositive.

Of course, Indian tribes are not states or the federal government. State and federal law enforcement come from a long history and practice of coercing confessions from suspects (one of the reasons to guarantee an attorney and a jury of peers) that is missing from most tribes. In fact, the consents to be subjected to the jurisdiction of his own tribe. See Duro, supra, at 693.... The majority today reaches beyond that limited exception.”).

394 See generally Newton, *Permanent Legislation, supra note __; Skibine, Power Play, supra note __.

398 See, e.g., Talton v. Mayes, 163 U.S. 376 (1896) (holding that the Bill of Rights does not apply to tribal governments because they are not arms of the federal government); Angela R. Riley, Good (Native) Governance, 107 COLUM. L. REV. 1049, 1050-51 (2007).

400 See Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 477 (1966) (“The principles announced today deal with the protection which must be given to the privilege against self-incrimination when
The conviction rate of Indians in federal courts is astronomically high because Indian defendants are far more likely to confess to crimes, a result (it is said) of the Indian tradition to admit mistakes in order to allow community healing to begin. 401 Moreover, Indian tribes often do not have the resources to fund a public defender system; 402 but neither do tribal courts sentence the guilty to jail as a matter of course. 403

There were reasons why the Court didn’t agree to hear the Means and Morris cases. First, the Court doesn’t like to reverse a 7-2 decision so quickly after announcing it. With the recent turnover on the Court, quick reversals makes the Court look too much like a political body, subject to the political whims of its members. 404 Second, neither the Means nor the Morris case met the list of due process factors that concerns Justice Kennedy. Both defendants were not indigent and were represented by counsel in tribal court. 405 And Navajo law even provides for nonmember Indians like Means to participate in tribal politics (which he did) and even sit on juries (he refused to register). But the next case in the pipeline to the Court might include those factors.

What tribal advocates and policymakers should now be on the lookout for are appeals of tribal court convictions of nonmember Indians who are indigent, unrepresented, cannot sit on tribal court juries, and who are sentenced to even a single day of jail. Russell Means arguably now faces the justice of the Navajo Nation because he didn’t meet those requirements. Forward-looking tribes are thinking about funding public defender offices and appointed counsel procedures and adopting rules that allow for criminal trial juries to include defendants’ peers. And they are wise to do so.

2. Tribal Civil Jurisdiction over Nonmembers

In this area, there is not the same importance to the Court’s constitutional concerns as there is in the criminal jurisdiction area, but the same questions are present.

Justice Scalia’s majority opinion in Nevada v. Hicks held that tribal courts do not have jurisdiction over federal civil rights claims by tribal members against state officers for actions that occurred in Indian Country. However, the opinion acknowledged an open question – “We leave open the question of tribal-court jurisdiction over nonmember defendants in general.” In a concurring opinion, Justice Souter raised several questions as to whether tribal courts should ever have jurisdiction over nonmember defendants. Justice Souter’s opinion suggests that at least some members of the Court worry that subjecting nonmembers to the processes and laws of Indian tribes might be a violation of due process. There seems to be a worry that tribal laws are “unusually difficult for an outsider to sort out.” As a response, Indian law scholars have critiqued the very notion of implicit divestiture, arguing that the Court’s authority in the area is questionable and flawed. Others argue that respect for tribal sovereignty should compel the Court to recognize tribal court jurisdiction over nonmembers. Still others have argued that the tribal law that might be confusing to an outsider never 408 Hicks, 533 U.S. at 358 n. 2.

---

409 See Hicks, 533 U.S. at 375-86 (Souter, J., concurring).
410 See Hicks, 533 U.S. at 384-85.
411 Hicks, 533 U.S. at 385.
412 E.g., LaVelle, Outtakes, supra note __.
413 E.g., Ann Tweedy, The Liberal Forces Driving the Supreme Court’s Divestment and Debasement of Tribal Sovereignty, 18 BUFF. PUB. INT. L. J. 147 (2000).
applies to outsiders and that tribal courts apply Anglo-American law to nonmembers.414

At one point, the Court acknowledged a concern that divesting tribal courts of jurisdiction would be detrimental to tribal self-government and the development of tribal institutions,415 but the Court does not appear to be concerned with these questions any longer. Tribal advocates should develop pragmatic reasons that would persuade the Court that preserving tribal civil jurisdiction over nonmembers is important.

B. Federal Statutes of General Applicability

Another area of difficulty is the question of whether federal laws that do not state on their face that they apply to Indian tribes actually do apply to Indian tribes.416 Federal employment rights statutes such as the Fair Labor Standards Act417 and the National Labor Relations Act418 are silent as to whether they apply to Indian tribes as employers. Other federal statutes, such as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964,419 explicitly exclude Indian tribes while others, such as certain criminal420 and environmental421 statutes, explicitly include Indian tribes. The federal circuit courts of appeal have adopted differing – and one could argue, conflicting – common law tests to determine whether or not the federal statute of general applicability will apply.422

Whether the Court – assuming it agrees to hear a case in this area (it has not done so yet) – decides that a federal statute of general applicability will apply to Indian tribes most likely will depend far more on the federal policy announced by Congress in the statute than on foundational principles 417 See Reich v. Great Lakes Indian Fish & Wildlife Commission, 4 F.3d 490 (7th Cir. 1993).

418 See NLRB v. Pueblo of San Juan, 276 F.3d 1186 (10th Cir. 2002).
419 See Charland v. Little Six, Inc., 198 F.3d 249 (8th Cir. 1999) (Title VII).
422 See, e.g., Singel, Labor Relations, supra note __, at 702-03 nn. 87 & 94 (listing cases from different circuits that follow conflicting approaches).
of tribal sovereignty. Consider a D.C. Circuit case, San Manuel Indian Bingo and Casino v. National Labor Relations Board, for example. Tribal advocates argued forcefully that foundational principles of tribal sovereignty and federal Indian law compel the court to find that the National Labor Relations Act does not apply to Indian tribes or their business interests, arguments all but ignored by the D.C. Circuit panel. But the case could have come down to non-Indian law principles: first, whether Congress originally intended the Act to apply to tribal businesses in 1935; and, second, if not, whether the Act’s scope can change over decades to encompass the relatively recent phenomenon of successful tribal business operations employing numerous nonmembers. The second issue, even if the D.C. Circuit does not reach it, might become an important constitutional reason for the Court to grant certiorari in an appeal from either side.

C. Tenth Amendment

A recent addition to the discussion of federal Indian law is the Tenth Amendment. Long considered to be part of the recognition of the historical fact that the states have little or no stake in the federal-tribal relationship, the Rehnquist Court’s buttressing of states’ rights appears to have emboldened states’ claims based on the Tenth Amendment against tribal interests in recent years. There are two major areas in which the states are making Tenth Amendment claims. First, states are arguing that the Department of Interior’s authority to take land into trust for the benefit of Indian tribes – and the 423 475 F.3d 1306 (D.C. Cir. 2007).

---

424 See Petitioners’ Opening Brief at 21-34, San Manuel Indian Bingo and Casino v. National Labor Relations Board, 475 F.3d 1306 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (Nos. 05-1392 & 05-1432).
425 See San Manuel, 475 F.3d at 1314-19.
426 See Singel, Labor Relations, supra note __, at 719-25 (arguing that Congress did not).
concomitant immunity from state tax and regulatory authority – violates states’ reserved rights under the Tenth Amendment. Second, in one state supreme court, tribal political activities that appear to interfere with state political activities have triggered the Tenth Amendment in a manner sufficient to abrogate tribal sovereign immunity. The question that the Court could decide soon is whether the Tenth Amendment is important enough to limit certain exercises of tribal sovereignty.

D. Indian Land Claims

One final area worth discussing here is the question of longstanding Indian land claims. Here, the Court appears to recognize no constitutional concerns that weigh in favor of Indian tribes, but there are significant pragmatic concerns. The Court is very worried that Indian land claims and other claims to sovereignty with upset the “settled expectations” of private landowners and state and local governments. But, if there are significant constitutional concerns, they are property rights that should favor of the tribal and federal interests. However, these cases are examples of where pragmatic concerns appear to trump any constitutional concerns.

In 2005’s City of Sherrill v. Oneida Indian Nation, the Supreme Court rewrote the rules on “ancient” tribal claims to sovereignty by allowing – for the first time in recent memory and with the last time benefiting private property owners – states and local governments opposing tribal sovereignty and Indian tribes to raise equitable defenses. In other words, the Court held that the Nation (and the United States) waited too long to bring their claims. Although City of Sherrill did not adjudicate an Indian land claim (it had already been settled), the Second Circuit relied upon the decision as the basis for dismissing land claims in Cayuga Indian Nation v. Pataki, claims valued at hundreds of millions of dollars. The State of New York and its subdivisions now argue in every land claims pleading that too much time has 429 See Carcieri, 290 F. Supp. 2d at 189-90; City of Roseville, 219 F. Supp. 2d at 154.

---

430 See Agua Caliente Band of Cahuilla Indians v. Superior Court, 148 P.3d 1126, 1135-36 (Cal. 2006).
434 The last time was Felix v. Patrick, 145 U.S. 317 (1892).
435 See City of Sherrill, 544 U.S. at 213-14.
436 See id. at 217-19.
437 See id. at 202.
438 413 F.3d 266 (2nd Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 126 S. Ct. 2022 (2006).
439 See id. at 268 ($248 million).
passed to restore tribal sovereignty and Indian lands. It seems certain that tribes bringing land claims and other long-standing claims to sovereignty must traverse this new (and hostile) world of equitable defenses in order to prevail. The very notion of an Indian land claim may soon disappear. States and local governments may have found their trump card in dealing with the troublesome tribal claims to land and sovereignty.

But the opponents of tribal land claims may be too smart for their own good. The dismissal of Indian land claims on the basis that too much time has passed since the transactions in which Indian land ownership passed into the hands of non-Indians and non-tribal governments may reduce state and local government liability, but the liability could shift to the federal government. Thousands of Indian land claims involving millions upon millions of acres now lay dormant, preserved in accordance with a 1982 federal statute, waiting to be activated and prosecuted by the Department of Justice. Many, if not the vast majority, of these land claims are based upon events that transpired long ago and could be subject to the equitable defenses the City of Sherrill Court held could be applied to “ancient” tribal claims. If these claims are barred by the passage of time, it will be because of the failure of the United States to prosecute the land claims. As a result, the United States will be liable to the Indian tribes who lost out on their land claims. Tens of billions of dollars – and perhaps hundreds of billions of dollars – are at risk as a direct result of the City of Sherrill and Cayuga Indian Nation cases.

Consider an older case. In 1968, the Supreme Court decided Menominee Tribe of Indians v. United States. The posture of the case was most unusual in that both the named parties – the Tribe and the Government – asked the Court to affirm a Court of Claims ruling. The State of Wisconsin, appearing as amicus curiae, was the only party arguing in favor of reversal. The case arose when Congress enacted the Menominee Termination Act of 1954, disbanding the tribal government and transferring the Tribe’s assets to a private corporation owned and operated by the tribal members. Menominees continued to exercise their hunting and fishing rights guaranteed

---

444 See id. at 407 (citing Menominee Tribe of Indians v. United States, 388 F.2d 998 (Cl. Ct. 1967)).
445 See id.
446 See id. at 408.
by the 1854 Treaty of Wolf River, however, and the State began to enforce its laws and regulations on them, culminating in a Wisconsin Supreme Court decision holding that the 1954 termination act had abrogated the 1854 treaty rights.\(^447\) The Tribe then turned to the federal claims courts and sought just compensation under the Fifth Amendment against the United States for the loss of the treaty-protected hunting and fishing rights. The Court of Claims held that the Tribe wasn’t entitled to compensation because the treaty rights had not been abrogated,\(^448\) leading to the unusual posture of the argument before the Supreme Court, with the United States hoping to avoid liability by convincing the Court to strike down the Wisconsin Supreme Court’s decision.

There are reasons to believe that same scenario could play out in the context of Indian land claims barred by equitable defenses – and perhaps it will play out that way in hundreds or even thousands of cases. First, in these cases, the basis for bringing a land claim is a violation of a federal statute or an Indian treaty provision. The New York land claims, for example, arise under the Trade and Intercourse Acts, where the federal government had a duty to prevent – and if not prevent, then to seek a reversal of – the underlying transactions leading to the land claims.\(^449\) In the case of land claims arising out of treaty provisions, the claims are based on a treaty provision that places an affirmative mandate upon the federal government to prevent the dispossession of Indian lands. In many, many circumstances, federal government officials participated in the acts of dispossession – clear acts of illegality.\(^450\) Second, given that the federal government often is the only party capable of suing to recover Indian lands or to seek compensation because of state sovereign immunity,\(^451\) the equitable defense applies against the government for failure to act. In effect, the federal government is at fault and therefore culpable.\(^452\)

---

\(^{447}\) See id. at 407-08 (citing State v. Sanapaw, 124 N.W.2d 41 (Wis. 1963)).
\(^{448}\) See id. at 407.
\(^{450}\) E.g., Ewert v. Bluejacket, 259 U.S. 129 (1922).
Moreover, before any tribe can proceed with a claim under Section 2415, the federal government must exercise discretion in determining whether or not to prosecute the claim on behalf of the tribe. In other words, each Section 2415 claim places a strict duty on the federal government. Since 1983, when the government published the land claims in the Federal Register, the Department of Justice has chosen to take up only a few. Over two decades have passed since the government published the land claims. Given the harshness of the equity rules announced by federal courts, it may already be too late for the federal government to recover. Federal government liability may be accruing this moment.

Conclusion … and a Caveat

What remains of federal Indian law in Supreme Court jurisprudence? What remains of the rule of law in this entire field? The foundational principles that resonated with the Marshall, Warren, and Burger Courts have not been persuasive to the Rehnquist or Roberts Courts. Given the Court’s unwillingness to trace these foundational principles to the Constitution, it would appear that these principles no longer carry the day. Did these principles ever carry the day in the Supreme Court, even for the Courts that created and cemented them? Is “ruthless pragmatism” the guiding principle of the Roberts Court’s Indian law cases? Perhaps federal Indian law is dead, if it ever existed.

Observers of federal Indian law often chuckle when they read in The Brethren about how Supreme Court Justice Brennan once referred to Antoine v. Washington, a 1975 case about the prosecution of a pair of Colville tribal members, as a “chickenshit” case. Or how Justice Harlan referred to 1970’s Tooahnippah v. Hickel as a “peewee” case. Indian law advocates chuckle 453 See 28 U.S.C. § 2415 (b) (“That, for those claims that are on either of the two lists published pursuant to the Indian Claims Limitation Act of 1982, any right of action shall be barred unless the complaint is filed within (1) one year after the Secretary of the Interior has published in the Federal Register a notice rejecting such claim or (2) three years after the date the Secretary of the Interior has submitted legislation or legislative report to Congress to resolve such claim or more than two years after a final decision has been rendered in applicable administrative proceedings required by contract or by law, whichever is later.”) (emphasis added).

---

454 See 48 FED. REG. 13698 (Mar. 25, 1983).

because the Supreme Court accepts far more Indian law cases for review than would be expected, given the decreasing opportunities to “arouse the judicial libido.”

In 1991, H.W. Perry interviewed several Supreme Court Justices and some of their former clerks in a study to determine what makes a case “certworthy,” or worthy being granted certiorari. One of the Justices, who identified him or herself as a “Westerner,” referred to Indian law cases as “crud cases” worthy of assignment only to junior Justices. But in the same breath, the Westerner Justice said, “Actually, I think the Indian cases are kind of fascinating. It goes into history and you learn about it, and the way we abused some of the Indians, we, that is the U.S. government....” That Justice then noted that, in the Rehnquist Court, there were three Westerners and they all had a special interest in western water law and in Indian law. Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice O’Connor are both from Arizona and Justice Kennedy is from California. Given that the Supreme Court’s “Rule of Four” states that it takes the vote of four of the nine Justices to grant certiorari in any given case, it would appear that in many Indian law cases, the three Westerners needed only one more vote to grant “cert.” Perhaps this helped to explain why the Court heard so many Indian law cases during the Rehnquist Court era.

But Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice O’Connor are no longer on the Court. They’ve been replaced by Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Alito, neither of whom could be called Westerners. The only Westerner Justice that remains is Justice Kennedy. Two Indian law cases have been accepted this Term already, but upon closer reflection, one realizes they are not cases about federal Indian law principles, but rather are cases about statutory interpretation and administrative law. In the 2005 Term, the Court heard only one Indian law case, Wagnon v. Prairie Band of Potawatomi Indians 458 – and that case had been granted cert. during the 2004 Term when all three Westerners remained on the Court.459

Is Indian law no longer a favorite of Supreme Court certiorari decisions? Consider the cases that the Roberts Court has refused to hear: (1) Cayuga Indian Nation v. Pataki,460 where the Second Circuit Court of Appeals struck down Cayuga land claims amounting to more than $200 million; (2) South Dakota v. Department of Interior 461 and Utah v. Shivwits Band of Paiute Indians,462 two claims from states arguing that the federal law allowing the Bureau of Indian Affairs to take land into trust for Indian tribes

---

460 413 F.3d 266 (2d Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 126 S. Ct. 2022 (2006).
461 423 F.3d 790 (8th Cir. 2005), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 67 (2006).
was unconstitutional; and (3) Means v. Navajo Nation \textsuperscript{463} and Morris v. Tanner,\textsuperscript{464} two cases arguing that the federal statute affirming that tribes have criminal jurisdiction over nonmember Indians was unconstitutional. While there were plausible reasons for the Court to deny \textit{cert}. in these cases, perhaps the sole Westerner remaining on the Court can no longer garner the votes.\textsuperscript{465} For the eight non-Westerners on the Court, perhaps Indian law simply isn’t “certworthy.” We’ll see how the Roberts Court develops. As many observers know, the chief justice argued two Indian law cases before the Supreme Court – Alaska v. Native Village of Venetie \textsuperscript{466} (on behalf of the State of Alaska) and Rice v. Cayetano \textsuperscript{467} (on behalf of the State of Hawaii), both of which were devastating losses for Indian Country – so we know he is knowledgeable about some aspects of Indian law. One question yet to be answered is whether the Chief Justice transforms his professional expertise and experience in federal Indian law questions into votes for \textit{certiorari}.

Indian law might be dead after all. The principles that guided the Court over the first 200 years of its Indian law jurisprudence are shadows of their former selves. And, with the decline in the Court’s docket, there are fewer and fewer cases that attract the Court’s constitutional interest in a way that would allow tribal advocates to roll back some of the decisions disfavoring tribal interests.

Miigwetch.

\textsuperscript{463} 432 F.3d 924 (9th Cir. 2005) (en banc), \textit{cert. denied}, 127 S. Ct. 381 (2006).
\textsuperscript{466} 520 U.S. 522 (1998).
\textsuperscript{467} 528 U.S. 495 (2000).